Moonlighting at Monastery

Carmel's water allocation may force moratorium on construction

By NANCY HILLS

IF CARMEL has been using water in the past year at the same rate as the rest of the Monterey Peninsula, new construction in the city could be brought to a halt.

The Monterey Peninsula Water Management District could halt in August all new permits for water connections in the city if the city has exceeded its water allocation.

Figures for actual water use should be available later this month, said Bruce Buel, district general manager; if Carmel has exceeded its allocation the water district board could act to stop water meter permits at its Aug. 11 board meeting, in effect stopping any new construction.

Last year Carmel used 1,009 ac. ft. of its 1,031 ac. ft. total allocation.

"If the increase (this year) in metered (water) sales was equal in Carmel to the increase in metered sales on the rest of the peninsula, its use would be 1,036 ac. ft." Buel said.

That would put Carmel five acre feet over its water allocation and the water district board could stop issuing water meter permits for the city, he said. Permits already issued but not yet connected will still be serviced, however, Buel added.

Figures released by California-American Water Co. earlier this month showed increased water production from June 1985 to July 1986 over the previous year by 492 ac. ft., an increase of 2.2 percent.

Though the city's water usage in last year's figures were down from the previous year, at 97.8 percent use, Carmel is the closest to its total water use of all water district jurisdictions. Seaside is next in line with 91.2 percent of its allocation; followed by Pacific Grove, 90.3 percent; Monterey County, 87 percent; City of Monterey, 84.4 percent; Del Rey Oaks, 73.9 percent; and Sand City, 28.6 percent. Almost all have plans for their remaining water.

Members of both Carmel city staff and the water district staff agree that an important factor for Carmel could be the water conservation program initiated by the previous council in January 1985 and reaffirmed by the present council.

The program includes use of an underground spring for city landscaping, prohibiting a new business from using more water than the previous business at the same location, water fixture retrofitting requirements for old buildings and low-water use fixtures for new construction. The retrofitting could provide substantial amounts of savings, according to city planning staff.

THE CONSERVATION program is designed to move Carmel toward creating a 10 percent water reserve in its allocation, Staff Planner Brian Roseth explained earlier this year when the water ordinance was reviewed.

Balancing that out could be the number of people using the system, including the number of visitors in town. The more people using the system, Buel said, the "more people drink and the opposite of drink," causing higher water usage.

Large events, such as the mayoral election, which brought in many visitors, including news media, and the possible visit by the Pope next year, all have an effect on water use, he added.

However, Buel said, there have not been any "real major (building) developments" in Carmel that would use large amounts of water.

Roseth explained that 15 new single-family residences

Nipping at her heels

Dear Editor:

In deference to the superior control exercised by the City of Carmel, creating a most delightful place in which to live, we would like to offer a suggestion.

Our leash law could be strengthened, in particular around the beach area. It was apparent today that pet owners are not concerned when their dogs jump at joggers.

I experienced within a three-block area, from Tenth going south, eleven dogs. Owners were calmly gazing about when three of these dogs stopped me from jogging.

The signs prohibiting alcohol are great; however, the absence of leash law signs is apparent.

Drunks, although not a welcome sight anywhere, have yet to be seen nipping at the heal of a jogger!

Don't promote a 'show'

Dear Editor:

To Mayor Eastwood and City Hall Staff:

On the agenda of the last city council meeting was a topic that concerned my partner, Judy Higgerson, and myself. We were interested, because of our involvement with senior citizens, through our home care business, in the development of the senior citizen housing problem.

Because of all the media hype as well as numerous comments we had heard from people on the peninsula regarding the mobs of tourists surrounding city hall prior to meetings, I became very concerned about being admitted to the hall.

I felt that we should have some sort of pass or priority admittance being members of the CBA, residents, as well as having a distinct interest in several items on the agenda. I did not want to sit or stand in the fog for hours and be jostled by tourists. I had been convinced this would be our fate. The staff at city hall were polite but adamant that there were no passes issued or special seating. I was irate and promised them a "Letter to the Editor." Well, here it is:

I apologize for being intimidated by the press, publicity, and rumor. I arrived 15 minutes early as you suggested and stood among other Carmel residents at the front of city hall. There was a very small line of tourists who we simply walked past. Knowing most of the other Carmel business people who were in line, we enjoyed visiting with some folks we hadn't seen in quite a while and discussing some of the issues we were concerned about. The doors were opened and the residents entered the hall. I was close to last to enter and did not see any tourists enter before me nor did I see the staff request identification of anyone. Distinguishing residents and business people from tourists was quite easy. The staff was amicable and seating was orderly and comfortable.

Let's not let exaggerated publicity move the meetings to Sunset center where, I believe, an auditorium atmosphere will detract from the personal aspect of city hall as well as promote the idea of a "show."

Housing needs

Dear Editor:

Something is going on in Carmel that puzzles me. The last administration had made plans to give the elderly poor of Carmel housing for an affordable price. Then I heard rumors about not wanting housing for the poor — in fact, not wanting poor in Carmel; only the rich should live here! Then our new mayor and City Council — in a closed meeting — put a parking lot there on the lots bought for the housing units. Temporarily, of course, until September.

Now the Carmel Foundation has come to the rescue. They want to raise money to put up the buildings — how wonderful! Cheers for the Foundation!

How about charging for parking in the housing parking lots? Start at $100 a month for all-day parking, and $3 an hour for hourly parking. Then give the money to the Foundation to help build the housing. I am sure that our merchants would be more than pleased to help in this way.

I don't doubt that some people in Carmel are very cold-hearted, but certainly most people are not.

Some housing and apartment prices have gone up terribly. In 15 years rents have gone from $95 a month to $600 a month — and more. That explains why some people are living in garages. There are some very kind landlords in Carmel, but they are very few. In order to get aid for rentals, small houses with one bedroom cannot rent for more than $350 a month. And one-bedroom apartments must be around $300 a month. Without help, many may become bag ladies on Ocean Avenue.

Come on, fellow Carmelites, let's support the Foundation and help the home folks! I am sure that not many of our lovely citizens are those talking about dumping the poor — many of whom have lived and worked here for many years. Show the world that Carmelites really know how to help their own!

Grasping Spanish

Dear Editor:

I keep running into people who say they would dearly love to study Spanish if only there were some convenient time and place. Here's good news for them. A fresh term is about to get underway at the Carmel Foundation under the auspices of the Carmel Adult School.

For those at entry level, a beginning class is scheduled for Wednesdays from 1 to 3 p.m. starting July 23. For other degrees of competence, there will be an intermediate class from 1 to 3 on Tuesdays, starting July 22, and an advanced class from 3 to 5 the same day. The cost is under $2 an hour.

The rest of the good news is that the classes will continue to be taught by the simpatica Maria Rosa Mencia who has helped so many of us to gain a working knowledge of Spanish.

Anyone interested should come to the first class to enroll and, if you want, it can be a trial session to see if it fits your needs.

Mexico and other Latin countries are an irresistible bargain these days. Some grasp of the language is an added bonus.

Degrading debate

Dear Editor:

If Piccadilly Park were endowed with such human characteristics as pride and empathy, it would surely be feeling both humiliated and embarrassed. Humbly, it awaits the decision as to whether it will be transformed into a sculptural paradise or whether it will be used as a site for human excrement.

Putting itself in the artists' place, Piccadilly Park would certainly feel embarrassed. The artists, like Piccadilly Park, are also having to endure the degrading debate: "Sculpture Garden vs. Water Closet."

And so the question continues: will we invest to further develop this Garden of Eden, or are we going to just let this park go to waste?

Piccadilly Park is ideal for a sculpture garden. It is already perfectly designed and landscaped for an easy and graceful transition. I, for one, would much rather see the great works of men and women than to see signs which read "MEN" and "WOMEN."

The 'real' world

RECENTLY ON this page we published five letters from students at a San Diego high school concerning Mayor Clint Eastwood's "firing" of several planning commission members.

The letters for the most part were well written, with strong opinions and a sense of humor, even though some of the facts were a little askew. However, their information was obtained entirely from San Diego-area dailies, most likely from wire service sources, so the students cannot be entirely faulted for getting a few things turned around.

I asked for, and received, a little background on these students from one of their teachers, Judy Barber, who wrote:

"Thank you for responding to my students' letters. They were thrilled at seeing their work published in the Pine Cone.

"The students that I serve are students who have been expelled from the school districts and are on probation for an infraction of the law. Most of these students are "at risk" students and a large percent drop out of high school. They are turned off by the educational system which does not serve their needs.

"It's nice to see my kids turned on and excited by your response."

Also on this page in a recent issue we published a letter critical of the students, who the letter writer said "don't know about Carmel and care less about our problems. Who do these people think they are sitting in judgment of my vote?"

Well, if you may recall, one of the biggest campaign issues during our recent city council election was the perception of Carmel by the "outside" world; that we're seen here as "Scrooge City" with a "kill-joy mentality" and enact ridiculous laws "banning ice cream cones."

It's not only important to find out how the "outside" world perceives us, but that these students, who are not exactly enamored with our legal or educational system, are concerned and involved enough to take the time to study, write letters and become informed of the issues and events, even if they take place several hundred miles away. Much as some people would like it, Carmel does not exist in its own self-contained microcosm; it's part of the real world and is affected — and believe it or not affects — what happens in it.

Ms. Barber also included five more letters from her students in response. Here are some excerpts:

"I think it's a really good thing when a somebody gives a little guy a chance to be heard! Thank you! When something like this happens, It makes me become more interested in politics. It also lets me know ther are good people in politics." (Christina Rekow, 16)

"I am a 17-year-old girl who was recently busted in the Mount Miguel High School drug bust. Since then I have learned not to judge people without knowing all the facts. I would appreciate knowing Mayor Eastwood's side of the story. I believe the San Diego Union only supplied information on one side of the story and were biased in their analysis of the incident." (Shari Rutter)

"A couple of months ago we were involved in a drug bust. Since then we have gotten bad reputations, like for instance, "good-for-nothing druggies," and so on. People are always stereotyping us, and I would like them to meet us first before they say so. Well, the point I'm trying to make is that I know now that someone cares enough to take the time to listen to us. Thanks." (Shawn Stramat, 15)

Shouldn't we be trying to encourage students like these three? Let them know that their voices can be heard and that they do make a difference? That yes we are interested in what other people think about us and our problems. That yes we would like to foster a positive — and truer — image of Carmel. God knows we've been taking a beating in the past few years, and in most cases undeservedly so.

The "outside" view of Carmel also comes not so much from the village itself — the beauty and attraction of Carmel stands on its own merits — but from the attitudes and actions of its citizens (and elected officials I might add).

It's even more important now that Carmel puts on a good face and sets a good example because everything we do can become front page news halfway across the world, whether we like it or not.

It's about time we pulled our heads out of the sand and acknowledge what's going on "out there."

Before rezoning for development

EIR for Mission Ranch needs to be certified

By MICHAEL GARDNER

IN A decision expected to dramatically reduce the density and potential price tag for Mission Ranch, the state Court of Appeals has upheld the contention of the city of Carmel that Monterey County should certify an environmental impact report before rezoning the resort for development.

While city officials hailed the decision as a major victory in a lengthy battle to preserve the historic ranch just south of Carmel, Mission Ranch Resort co-owner and spokesman Doug Tuck announced the company will not appeal again.

The unanimous San Jose Court of Appeal decision means that Monterey County must prepare and certify an environmental impact report (EIR) prior to rezoning the property to allow for up to 75 housing units, including townhouses, on the site.

The EIR also is to protect the fragile wetlands from any adverse impacts of development.

The EIR and rezoning will be required before the county can review development plans.

Mission Ranch Corp. proposes to build 61 units on about 8.25 acres — none of which is in the wetlands. However, the size of the development is based on the overall density of the 20-acre Mission Ranch, of which the owners said only 4.68 acres should be set aside as protected wetlands.

The 61-unit density is based on the Carmel Area Land Use Plan that provides permissive zoning for between two and six units per acre, but not to exceed 75 homes on the site.

By ordering a new environmental review, the court has given the Monterey County Board of Supervisors an opportunity to increase the size of the protected wetlands and thus, decrease density.

Following the court decision, Fifth District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman said she will push for the maximum wetlands protection, which would be nearly 12 acres. That would leave about eight acres of developable land.

If eight acres turns out to be the number used by supervisors, then Mission Ranch Resort would be restricted to a maximum of about 48 units. Using minimum density standards, only approximately 16 units could be developed.

THE SAN Jose Court of Appeal handed Mission Ranch Resort a major setback in its development plans, requiring that an environmental impact report be prepared prior to rezoning the property for additional building. The decision very well could cut the density for the project and perhaps drop its price tag should the city of Carmel succeed in its attempts to buy the site. (Holly McFarland photo.)

Simple laws of economics rule that the less density, the less attractive Mission Ranch Resort is as a development. That factor is expected to cut its value.

And that is good news for the city of Carmel, which at one time offered Mission Ranch Resort $3.75 million for the property. The offer was rejected; owners at that time before the court decision reportedly wanted about $8 million.

THE FORMER city council envisioned working with the Coastal Conservancy, Carmel Heritage and Frohman Academy on preserving the wetlands and using the existing resort buildings for cultural and recreational facility.

New Mayor Clint Eastwood since has been working on a private deal involving Mission Ranch, but has refused to reveal details.

Tuck no longer insists that the number one priority of the owners is to build homes.

"We'd love to work something out. We haven't had any communication for a couple of months," he told the Carmel Pine Cone Monday.

Asked if he felt more inclined to sell now that Mission Ranch Corp. lost its case, Tuck said, "Not necessarily, no. It's just one of those things you face."

Tuck said he plans to continue processing the building application. "We'll just follow procedures. We have an environmental impact report (uncertified) so there won't be much to do to fulfill the requirements."

Strasser Kauffman said that when the issue comes before supervisors she will ask for the "broadest definition" of wetlands as recommended by one of the four consultants who studied the acreage question. Dr. Robert Curry, employed by the city, recommended that 11.9 acres be set aside as protected wetlands.

Strasser Kauffman, who was not on the board during the original rezoning in 1984, said that setting aside the highest possible acreage will be "environmentally safe in the long run...If we err, we'll err on the side of caution."

Former Mayor Charlotte Townsend was elated when told the news. "Hot dog," she exclaimed. "I am just thrilled. I think this is definitely a blow for the interests of the community."

The suit was filed by the former city council. The city won the first round in Monterey County Superior Court, but Mission Ranch Resort appealed. The county chose not to be a party to the appeal.

Townsend said that the case shows that Carmel cannot consider itself an island. "Most of our problems come from outside the city limits."

Townsend added, "I hope this demonstrates to the owners that this property isn't something to be exploited for personal gain, but should be a treasure to be used and enjoyed by our citizens."

Ex-Councilman David Maradei noted, "I think that the decision basically affirms the opinion of the former city council that the only time we involved ourselves in lawsuits was when there was a principle involved and that principle involved is proper planning."

CURRENT COUNCILMAN Bob Fischer believes that the decision will affect the city's chances of acquiring Mission Ranch.

"I think it will improve it and certainly make it more attractive to us," Fischer said. "But even if the city shouldn't get the property, the smaller density for building certainly will be more favorable."

In its lawsuit, the city contended that the county should have required an environmental impact report prior to rezoning Mission Ranch to allow for more extensive development.

The city also charged that the county erred in its decision to set aside only 4.68 acres as protected wetlands.

The court, in an opinion written by Judge Harry Brauer, outlined several "substantive issues" to support why the three-judge panel upheld the city.

The first issue, according to the judges, is "was the Mission Ranch rezoning a project and if so, was an EIR required?".

Brauer wrote that the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) only allows for a negative declaration if "it can be seen with certainty that there is no possibility that the activity in question may have a significant effect on the environment."

Ramsey withdraws from Flanders Mansion marketing

By MICHAEL GARDNER

PLANNING COMMISSIONER Carla Ramsey has withdrawn her proposal to market the city-owned Flanders Mansion estate "lest there be any appearance of possible or potential conflict of interest . . ."

Ramsey, a Realtor Associate with Ocean Avenue Real Estate, withdrew her marketing offer in a letter dated July 3. The withdrawal was not publicly released until July 10.

CARLA RAMSEY has withdrawn her name from a proposal to market Flanders Mansion for the city of Carmel.

Ocean Avenue Realty, under the signature of managing broker Yvonne Campbell, resubmitted a new proposal to the city also dated July 3.

The council in August is expected to review the issue of marketing Flanders Mansion and perhaps call for new proposals. The city expects to sell Flanders Mansion for approximately $750,000. A year-old report indicates that it will cost more than $350,000 to renovate and meet current health and safety codes.

The council at its June 3 meeting had directed staff to prepare an agreement between the city and Ocean Avenue Realty to market the mansion sitting on 1.43 acres inside Mission Trail Park. The agreement had not been signed.

Ocean Avenue Realty on Aug. 5, 1985 and again on May 22 wrote the council with proposals to market Flanders Mansion. Ocean Avenue Realty at that time was the only firm to express an interest in marketing the property.

Ramsey faced a potential conflict of interest between her role as planning commissioner and marketing agent for the city-owned Flanders Mansion.

Ramsey told the The Pine Cone July 10 that she had contacted the Fair Political Practices Commission and the Attorney General's office to ask for opinions on whether she had a conflict of interest.

Both offices advised that Ramsey consult the city attorney. Ramsey said she discussed the issue with City Atty. Don Freeman, who since has formally requested opinions from the Fair Political Practices Commission and Attorney General.

"I didn't want anybody to think anything other than I'm above board," Ramsey said.

Ramsey also met with Freeman, City Administrator Doug Schmitz and Mayor Clint Eastwood prior to the council meeting of July 1. At that meeting Ramsey and four others were permanently appointed to the planning commission after serving in that capacity on a temporary basis for a few weeks.

WHEN ASKED about the issue two weeks ago, Ramsey said that "we're looking into the various ramifications and trying to explore where some of the criticism is coming from and why.

"We have been talking to various people in the city."

But neither Ramsey, Schmitz nor Freeman released her letter publicly until July 10.

Ramsey said she did not specifically respond about the controversy nor release her letter until after the Thursday Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook edition because she was told by the city not to discuss it.

Following is Ramsey's letter to Schmitz with copies to Eastwood, Freeman and Campbell:

"On Aug. 6, 1985 and again this year on May 22, 1986, I approached the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea as an independent contractor and self-employed Realtor Associate requesting the opportunity to market the city-owned Flanders Mansion estate property.

"My first request in 1985 was turned down in a letter from you. I have not received a reply to my second request made this year. However The Carmel Pine Cone reported the intentions of the city to contract with the office I am associated with, Ocean Avenue Realty, for the sale of the Flanders property, though to date no one in our office has been approached to enter into a contract with the city.

"Subsequently, on June 11, 1986, Mayor Eastwood appointed me to the planning commission, at that time as a temporary member and, as of July 1, 1986, as a permanent member.

"Due to this finalized appointment and lest there be any appearance of possible or potential conflict of interest between my business as a real estate professional and my new capacity of service to the city, I withdraw my request to be the agent handling the sale of the Flanders Estate for the city of Carmel.

"I ask that this letter serve to note my withdrawal of said request and ask it be read and so entered into the minutes of your next city council meeting.

"In addition, I attach a copy of a letter from the chairman of the board of trustees of the Board of Realtors Political Action Committee accepting my resignation as a committee member of that organization. I ask this also be read and so entered into the minutes of your next city council meeting."

Carmel faces possible moratorium on building

have been approved this year projected to use 3.6 ac. ft. of water and the Carmel City Hall expansion has been completed, using .14 ac. ft.

"If our water use patterns have remained constant we should be all right," Roseth said.

The water district sent a request June 20 to meet with the City of Carmel to discuss water use, but has not yet received a reply, Buel said.

Meanwhile, Carmel sent to the water district (which was received July 10), a formal request to increase the city's allocation. Carmel has sent three similar requests in previous years to the district, Buel said, but it was opposed by other jurisdictions. He said, to increase Carmel's allocation, water would have to be taken from another city or from Monterey County.

The water allocations were set in 1981 to divide the 22,000 ac. ft. of water studies indicated the district could produce in a non-drought year. The district set aside 2,000 ac. ft. for drought reserve and 1,400 ac. ft. for water lost through system leaks, fires and other emergency usage.

Each jurisdiction had informed the district the amount of water it needed for present needs and projected growth. Carmel, which has approximately 5 percent of the district population, was given 1,031 ac. ft. or 5.5 percent of the remaining 18,600 ac. ft.

MORE WATER will not be available unless a new system of supply is developed. One major source could be the proposed San Clemente Dam that, even if the voters approve its funding, will not be ready until 1993.

A water reclamation plant for the Carmel Sanitary District could free additional potable water by using reclaimed water to irrigate golf courses, primarily in Del Monte Forest.

The competition for water by each jurisdiction in the district is "exactly why we have the allocation system," Buel said.

The district also discussed at its July 14 meeting of setting up a "second test" for determining when to stop issuing water meter permits. Those figures would be used in addition to the total amount of water used.

The district board directed staff to develop two separate proposals. One would designate a standard amount of water use for each meter set. The district would add up the number of meters and the amount of water use it equals. If that number is over the allocation, a moratorium on water meters would be instituted.

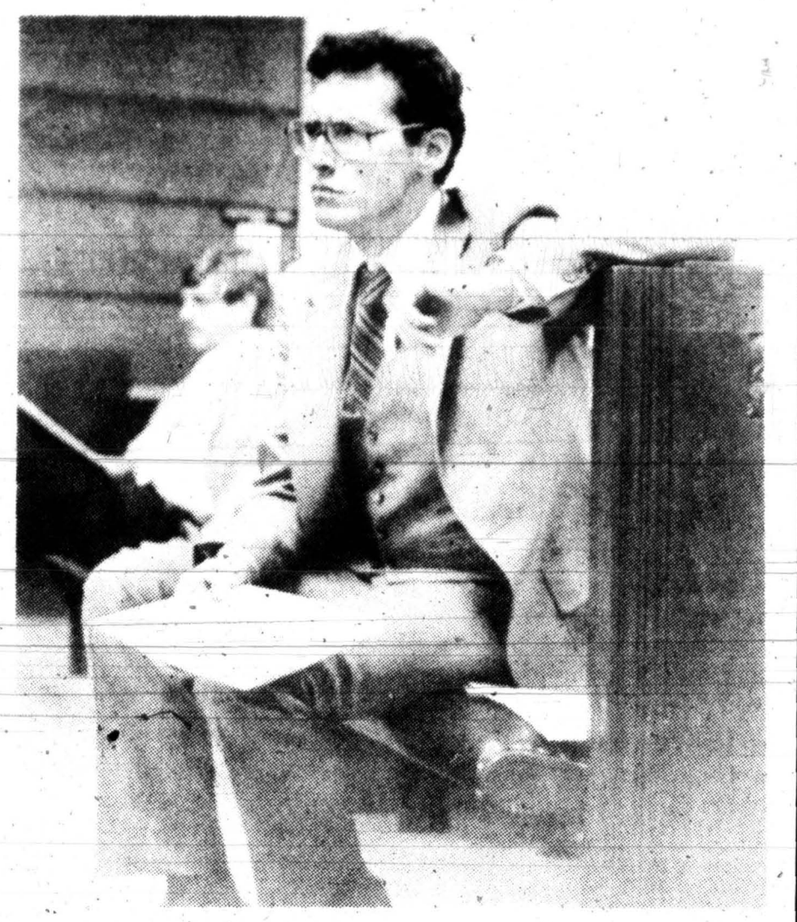
The second plan would require district jurisdictions to begin setting aside a percentage of their allocations for drought reserve. The percentage would be amortized over a period of years.

The district board will consider choosing one of the two plans in future board meetings.

"This has been coming for a long time," Director Pat Bernardi said during the meeting.

Director Nick Lombardo, a sponsor of the plans, told the board "you cannot imagine how hard it is for me to even think like this" and propose restrictions on free enterprise and private property rights, but, he added, "we find ourselves in some difficulty."

A major concern for the board is if there is a drought and the district cannot produce the amount of water it can now.



BRUCE BUEL, water district general manager, said if Carmel has been using water at the same rate as other jurisdictions on the peninsula the city may exceed its water allocation, possibly forcing a ban on new water connections.

Extensive resurfacing to take place on county streets

DOZENS OF areas of Monterey County, including Carmel Valley, Carmel Views and Carmel Knolls, have been scheduled for street resurfacing, a project that started yesterday (July 16).

The Sacramento-based firm of California Pavement Maintenance Co. (CPM CO) has been contracted by the county to resurface streets for a two-month period.

Residents in the affected areas will be notified 48 hours in advance of any work. Streets will also be posted 24 hours in advance.

Areas include: Rancho Canada, High Meadow, Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club, Carmel Views, Carmel Knolls, Rancho Del Monte, Handley Hills, Holt Valley Ranch, Berwick Manor, Rancho Mar Monte, Rancho Del Monte, and Corral de Tierra and adjacent areas.

Mission Ranch EIR needs certification says court

The court's opinion is based on a Supreme Court ruling that "the legislature intended (CEQA) to be interpreted in such a manner as to afford the fullest possible protection to the environment within the reasonable scope of the statutory language."

Brauer wrote that Mission Ranch Resort argued that its rezoning is not a "project" and taken by itself does not merit an EIR under CEQA requirements.

But Brauer cited a court case that basically "prohibits piecemeal environmental review accomplished by chopping a large project into many little ones each with a minimal potential impact on the environment — which cumulatively may have disasterous consequences."

The resort, the judge continued, wrote that "Mission Ranch attempts to distinguish its case from (the precedent decision) by arguing that its rezoning application was made solely to conform to the land use plan and by itself 'made no new or expanded commitment to the use of the property.'

"This argument is seemingly inconsistent with the proposition that the rezoning was not a 'project'...because it was part of a larger project," Brauer countered.

'MOREOVER, we find the contention that the rezoning was an isolated incident with no significance of its own to be somewhat disingenous in light of the fact that during the course of the hearings it became evident that development was planned on the Mission Ranch property, for which the rezoning was the first step."

In a footnote, Brauer wrote, "As late as the April 25, 1984 hearing, Mission Ranch's representative was insisting publicly that no development of the property was in the offing.

"On May 18, 1984, a little over a week after the planning commission finally approved the rezoning, Mission Ranch submitted a use permit application to the county proposing a development of 61 units."

By submitting an application for a development almost immediately, it is clear that the rezoning was part of an overall project and thus subject to the CEQA requirement for an environmental impact report, the court stated.

On the wetlands issue, the court noted in detail that four experts could not agree on the amount of acreage that should be set aside as protected wetlands.

The court also pointed out that the land use plan fails to provide adequate definitions of what constitutes wetlands.

When there is such disputes, Brauer wrote that precedents stipulate the need for an EIR.

"The very uncertainty created by the conflicting assertions made by the parties...underscores the necessity of the EIR to substitute some degree of factual certainty for tentative opinion and speculation," Brauer wrote in quoting the case of No Oil, Inc. vs. the City of Los Angeles.

A subsequent EIR on the development cannot serve as a substitute, the court also determined.

Big Sur community seeks conditions on marathon

BIG SUR businesses would like to see conditions imposed on the 1987 Big Sur International Marathon that will ensure an earlier starting time, provide half of the proceeds for local charities, and limit the number of participants.

That is according to Bob Bussinger, president of the Big Sur Chamber of Commerce and general manager of Ventana Inn.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisor, which earlier approved a second running of the marathon, now must consider placing conditions on the race.

Supervisors have scheduled a discussion of those conditions for 3 p.m. Tuesday, July 22 at the county courthouse in Salinas.

Bussinger told The Pine Cone that there are several conditions Big Sur residents would like to have supervisors address as part of the race permit.

To limit the number of hours the highway is closed, businesses propose that the race begin earlier than the 8 a.m. start this year.

"We'd love to see it other than a weekend," said Bussinger. But he quickly noted that a weekday race is impractical because of the large number of community volunteers needed.

The placement and timing of signs announcing the closing of Highway 1 for the race are "crucial" issues, Bussinger said.

"They need to get the signs up as late as possible and down as soon as possible," he said.

Signs should also point out that the closure is temporary and the road will be open within a few hours, Bussinger suggested.

Big Sur residents and businesses also want a large number of additional portable restrooms and for organizers to "educate runners to use them and not the road or private property," he said.

The community also wants a guaranteed percentage of the net profits to be donated to Big Sur charities. "Since Big Sur businesses are giving the biggest sacrifice, we think Big Sur charities should get some money back. I would say 50 percent would be reasonable."

And, Big Sur also would like to limit the number of runners to no more than 3,000, he said.

Bussinger added that businesses "do not have any real interest" in an event the Saturday before the race because it could "create a new nuisance."

Bussinger also will serve as an associate member of the marathon board of directors.

Supervisors also are expected to discuss emergency access conditions.

One more time around for planners and ice cream

IT'S ICE CREAM again for the Carmel Planning Commission.

The commission at its next meeting will again review the "frozen dessert ordinance," designed to make approval of ice cream parlors easier. The meeting is scheduled for 4 p.m. Wednesday, July 23 in Carmel City Council Chambers.

The commission will also consider an extension of evening hours for The Nature Company, a use permit for a candy shop on the corner of Ocean Avenue and Dolores Street, a use permit for a jewelry store on San Carlos Street and a request to use an outside display by Cheppu on Dolores Street.

The frozen dessert ordinance was developed by the former planning commission because the current ordinance makes is difficult to approve eating places that specialize in frozen dessert products like ice cream.

The new ordinance specifically names ice cream cones as a permitted uncovered takeout food but maintains the prohibition against being an exclusively takeout business.

The ordinance went to the Carmel City Council June 3 but was sent back for revisions. The council suggested a provision that required 60 percent seating be changed to a 20-seat minimum. It also suggested that such businesses be allowed in the Service Commercial District and not restricted to Central Commercial District.

Other conditions in the ordinance include restricting the business from blocking the public right-of-way with lines and clean-up of the surrounding area.

After the commission reviews the ordinance and makes its recommendations it is scheduled to go back to the city council Aug. 4.

The commission will also review:

- A request by the newly-opened Nature Company to extend its hours of operation from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.
- A use permit application by Paul Laub to put a chocolate shop and candy factory on the first level of the Paradise Building on the corner of Ocean Avenue and Dolores Street.
- A use permit for a jewelry store in the present location of the Carmel Barber Shop on San Carlos Street.
- An amendment to a use permit to allow Christine Kolisch use of an outside display for her shop, Cheppu, located behind Em Le's on Dolores Street.
- A lot line adjustment for Phil Coniglio on the southwest corner of Junipero and Fourth avenues.
- A variance from height standards for Deborah Ciremele's house addition in the park overlay district on the southeast side of Guadalupe between Monte Verde Street and Seventh Avenue.
- A use permit for specialty apparel sales in the Carmel Plaza.

Workshop on growth following new dam set for July 23

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Water Management District has scheduled the second in a series of workshops on the proposed San Clemente Dam for 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, July 23 in the Seaside City Council Chambers.

Doug Svensson of EIP Associates, the consultants preparing the environmental impact report (EIR) on the dam, will present a draft report assessing the cumulative impacts of the proposed project. The information is based on land use projections developed earlier this year and estimates the increases in traffic, air pollution, solid waste, wastewater generation and other factors the dam would allow by providing water for planned growth.

Growth-related impacts to local school districts, the peninsula infrastructure, other resources and services will be addressed, including capital costs associated with required increases in public services.

The workshop is open to the public.

City loses bid to recoup costs

THE CITY of Carmel lost its bid to recoup its court costs for the Mission Ranch lawsuit.

In its ruling, the San Jose Court of Appeals determined that the county of Monterey should not be required to pay for the city's cost of litigation.

"The trial court denied fees on the basis that city 'failed to prove the interest to the public versus its own interests as a municipality'," appeal court Judge Harry Brauer wrote in siding with the county.

Big Sur Land Trust helps in land acquisition

By MICHAEL GARDNER

THE BIG Sur Land Trust has helped preserve one of the most treasured open spaces along the coast — 437 acres commonly known as the Post property on the mountain overlooking Ventana Inn.

The acquisition was arranged by the Big Sur Land Trust, the San Francisco-based Trust for Public Land and the U.S. Forest Service, according to land trust Executive Director Brian Steen.

The culmination of a decade-old series of negotiations, the acquistion is a complex affair that involved the land trust acting as a negotiator.

Trust for Public Land actually purchased the Post property and then resold all 437 acres to the U.S. Forest Service, which will manage the site. Purchase price and the seller's identity were not revealed.

"Acquisition of private land is not a primary goal of the forest service. The purchase of the Post property is special in that it assures continued public access to the north coast ridge and to the Ventana Wilderness," explained Art Carroll, supervisor of the Los Padres National Forest.

"This property, so well cared for by the Post family, will continue to be managed for its outstanding scenic and recreational qualities," he continued.

Steen said that the purchase of the Post property "will facilitate wilderness recreation for the public by securing the Terrace Creek trailhead, a historic trail leading to the heart of the Ventana Wilderness."

Steen added that, "additional public benefits include the conservation of a remnant grove of California redwoods and the overall lessening of land uses incompatible with the preservation of the Big Sur coast."

Acquisition of the Post site — separate from the family homestead on the west side of Highway 1 — has been a "number one priority in terms of property for the U.S. Forest Service since 1983," Steen said.

The Big Sur Land Trust has been working on preserving the Post Property for about a decade, according to Steen.

"This illustrates what we're all about. It meets the needs of the landowner and protects the land at the same time," Steen said.

The 437-acre Post property is another in a long series of acquisitions arranged by the Big Sur Land Trust, a non-profit tax-exempt organization based at the mouth of Carmel Valley.

THE LAND trust has a saying, "private business for public benefit," and thus far that philosophy seems to have paid off.

Prior to the acquisition of the Post property, the Big Sur Land Trust had arranged the preservation of 5,270 acres at an estimated contributed value of just over $7 million.

But, the actual purchase costs have been just about $400,000, which works out to about $78 per acre.

The properties preserved as open space have ranged from the 3,040-acre Potter Ranch to a two-acre scenic easement that was arranged to protect a grove of redwoods just north of Esalen.

The types of preservation techniques have ranged from arranging a purchase to scenic easements to deed restrictions. By going through the land trust, the private property owner can be rewarded with big tax breaks and also know that he or she has helped preserve part of what is generally considered one of the most beautiful regions in the world.

The land trust does not retain any deeds to the property. "We don't have any ourselves at all. We just have the ability to ensure that the land is not developed," Steen said.

The Big Sur Land Trust was founded in 1977 by six residents — Roger and Beverly Newell, Nancy Hopkins, Sherna Stewart and Martin and Suzanne Forster — seeking to form "a community organization that could be utilized to preserve the natural resources of the community," Steen said.

The founders decided that the land trust should have two functions: public education

The first site acquired was a 23-acre parcel donated to the land trust by Michael Murphy of Esalen.

But it was the acquisition of the Potter Ranch that gave the land trust its legitimacy.

David Packard, of Hewlett-Packard and Monterey Bay Aquarium fame, bought the 3,040-acre site just north of Lucia and then retired the development rights. He retained only the rights to four residential housing sites while the remainder of the property is used as a field laboratory by the University of California at Santa Cruz.

As the land trust activities grew, the board of directors soon realized that a professional staff needed to be hired because of the complexities of real estate transactions.

Steen joined the land trust as its executive director in 1980 and attorney Zad Leavy has been retained for legal assistance.

The name Big Sur Land Trust may be somewhat of a misnomer — the organization has arranged several open space preservations in Carmel Valley as well.

That same year, 1980, the Carmel Valley Land Preservation Association merged with the Big Sur Land Trust and today also works closely with the Carmel Valley Trails Association.

The land trust also is closely tied with other national land trust organizations, as evidenced by its work with the Trust for Public Land in acquiring the Post property.

The Big Sur Land Trust is administered by a board of trustees, which includes President Alvin Andrus, Vice-President Roger Newell, Secretary Richard Dalsemer and treasurer Lloyd Jones along with nine other board members.

Like most non-profit groups, the land trust relies on donations and grants to keep its offices open. There also is a membership drive underway, which is $25 annually.

Hearing set for Los Padres Forest management plans

A HEARING on the proposed Los Padres National Forest management plan has been scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Monday, July 21 in the Carmel High School library.

The proposed management plan details uses and protection measures for the Los Padres National Forest that sweeps through six counties, including 1.7 million acres in Monterey County.

The plan includes provisions to ban offshore oil drilling, develop a multi-agency information center in Big Sur and to prevent development of a dam on the Big Sur River.

Also included in the plan are proposals to increase campsites along the Big Sur coast out of the scenic viewshed, add hiking trails in the forest and allow for acquisition of private lands from willing sellers.

Copies of the plan are available for public review in the Carmel, Carmel Valley and Big Sur libraries.

Written comments on the plan will be accepted until Sept. 30. Comments should be mailed to: Forest Supervisor LMP, Los Padres National Forest, 6144 Calle Real, Goleta, Ca. 93117.

Carmel rec program has cure for summertime blues

By KALINA HOWENSTEIN

GOT THE summertime blahs? Carmel-by-the-Sea Recreation Program '86 has the solution.

In its fourth year, this program, sponsored by the city of Carmel and the Carmel Unified School District, provides plenty of summer activities for children ages six to 14, or older in some classes.

Space is still available in the second session that begins July 23. However, Steve Taylor, director of the recreation program, warns, "The programs fill up quickly . . . lots of kids go to both sessions because (they) like it so much."

The recreation program offers instructional classes and clinics, all of which are taught by qualified recreation or education majors and instructors. These programs include swimming, tennis, soccer, girls basketball, karate, dance, art, and a day camp.

Taylor, who helped start the Carmel Summer Recreation Program in 1982, explains that it has a large enrollment because Carmel has "a surprising number of kids." There is also "a new rise in single parent families" in the area. The recreation program provides "safe education (programs) in a good environment."

The summer activities camp, a day camp, has been quite popular, especially for working parents. About 130 children are enrolled this year, Taylor said.

Parents buy "packages of hours" which are available from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Children are supervised and entertained with sports, movies, and games.

The city of Carmel provides the funds while the Carmel Unified School District's campuses are the facilities for the program, which is open to all children.

For further information and registration, come by Carmel River School, corner of 15th Avenue and Monte Verde Street or call 625-2252.

HERE ARE the Carmel-by-the-Sea Summer Recreation Program '86 classes that are still available for enrollment:

Karate, Tang Soo Do: Taught by Mike Bissel, a student of Chuck Norris, this course provides children with an introduction to karate. Bissel emphasizes basics and development of mental and physical discipline. The class is open for secind- to eighth-graders. Session Two begins July 23 at Carmel River School. Fee: $40.

1986 Summer Swimming Schedule: Classes for swimmers and divers with beginning or intermediate skills are open to children three to 18 years old. Session Three begins July 28 at the Carmel High School swimming pool. Fee: $20.

Dance Exploration Class: Terri Grimshaw, an experienced and successful child dance instructor, teaches beginning and intermediate dance. Ages six to 14 are welcome. Session Two begins July 23 at Carmel River School. Fee: $50.

Carmel Summer Recreation Tennis Clinic: Chad Ables, Pebble Beach pro and former top-rated Northern California Tennis Association player, conducts the clinics which are open to ages nine to 17. Session Two begins July 23 at the Carmel High School tennis courts. Fee: $35.

Arts and Crafts Extravaganza: Painting, drawing, printmaking, ceramics, and leather working will be included in this program taught by Chad Hammack. Children ages six to 14 may participate. Session Two begins July 23. Fee: $50.

Summer Activities Camp: Open through August 22, day camp provides children supervision and instruction in sports, games, and other activities. The daycare packages can be bought in 50, 100, or 160 hours at $80, $120, or $160 respectively. Ages six to 14 are welcome.

SUMMER FUN is offered by the Carmel Recreation Program, which will begin a new session soon. Above, Erin Muri — her face painted from activities earlier in the day — plays some tennis on the courts at the high school. Presbyterian church plan may be forced underground

By NANCY HILLS

CARMEL PRESBYTERIANS may have to go underground.

Their garage, that is.

Putting the parking lot underground was one suggestion the Carmel Planning Commission made July 9 to the Carmel Presbyterian Church about its application to add a two-story building over an existing parking lot. Despite opposition by one commissioner, the application was continued until Aug. 20 to give church officials time to develop plans.

The commission also conducted a design concept review prior to final design approval of the Grunion Run property development and decided to waive requiring the owner of the Oliver White building remodel from providing or paying in-lieu parking fees for two spaces.

The meeting was the first one for new commissioner Fred Keeble, who had been recovering from surgery; Vice Chairman Olof Dahlstrand presided over the meeting in Chairman Ken White's absence.

In a return engagement from a June 25 meeting, the representatives of Carmel Presbyterian Church and the planning staff requested the commission members give them direction and some indication if they were opposed to the concept of a two-story building and expanding the sanctuary at Junipero and Mountain View avenues.

The church has proposed, in a written report, building a two-story office/classroom complex, 3,480 sq. ft. on the first floor and 2,580 sq. ft. on the second, above its present parking lot. The building would be used primarily for Sunday school, youth activities and staff offices.

The sanctuary would be enlarged by 375 sq. ft., increasing seating capacity from 240 seats to 304. The entire project would increase the site coverage of the 42,612 sq. ft. lot from approximately 32 percent to approximately 47 percent.

The planning staff identified some of the issues the commission should address.

• Which zoning regulations the project should conform with.

The church is in an R-1 residential zone, though it sits on the edge of the boundary between R-1 and commercial zones and across Junipero Avenue from Carmel Plaza. Height and lot coverage rules in R-1 zones are different from commercial zones and are designed for private homes.

The church proposal only meets the R-1 zoning requirements of setbacks, the staff report states, and violates lot coverage, height and bulk requirements.

Staff planner Brian Roseth asked the commission if they would consider some kind of a "hybrid" of the residential and commercial zone requirements.

• The commission should decide if it felt the new addition would increase activity enough to warrant denial or putting some conditions on noise and hours of operation.

Most of the evening activity at the church, Roseth explained, is currently limited to the Junipero Avenue, or commercial, side of the church location. Roseth asked if the planners wish to encourage that trend.

• If there is sufficient parking for the new development. The church states it would retain the same number of parking places, 35, but the commission should decide if the activity would increase enough to require require more parking.

However, Keeble questioned whether the church be allowed to expand at all.

"When the commission first approved the church (in 1954), there was much discussion that this was a small church and would not extend into the residential district at all," he said. "I for one would have to look at this closely for approval."

It had grown from a small community church to incorporating offices for the entire area, he said.

Keeble said he would need more information than the [illegible] to make any decision.

In response, Community [illegible] Bruce Roberts said that the commission had given them an indication last time that they were agreeable to the project then; not agreeing now would be "unfair" to them.

Speaking for most of the commission, Dahlstrand quickly reviewed each of the points raised by the planning staff.

Dahlstrand said he was not inclined to "nickel and dime to death" the zoning statistics, but his biggest concerns were still the "physical aspects" of the project.

"The height seems potentially to be very, very oppressive to the site," Dahlstrand said, but added he was "just guessing from what the church presented."

He pointed out, with Keeble expressing agreement, that by placing the building over the parking lot in effect was creating a three-story building.

"You could probably solve the problem by putting the lot underground," Dahlstrand said. "You would have a much, much lower structure."

He added that he did not think the activity would increase by much, but there probably would be some conditions on a permit concerning usage.

Dahlstrand said he was "sympathetic" with the church not wanting to put too much money into plans before it knew if the concept was acceptable to the commission, but added the commission needed more information to make any concrete suggestions.

When the vote came to continue the application until Aug. 20, Keeble was the sole vote against reviewing further plans.

THE COMMISSION began its design concept review of the proposed 16,000 sq. ft. Grunion Run site development on the Fourth Avenue block from San Carlos to Mission streets.

Owner Robert D'Isidoro has proposed an office/apartment complex consisting of three two-story buildings to replace the vacant Grunion Run restaurant, which takes up the majority of property, and one single-family dwelling on the corner of San Carlos Street and Fourth Avenue.

The complex, designed by architect Dennis Hodgens, has what D'Isidoro calls a "Mediterranean look" reminiscant of the buildings on the northwest and northeast corners of Dolores Street and Seventh Avenue.

Roseth told the commission that some key elements to consider in the design are whether a continuous use of the same materials for the entire complex was appropriate, if there was sufficient natural lighting within the complex, and landscaping.

Keeble said he was for a change of materials to break up the look of the complex, to which Dahlstrand agreed.

Hodgens told the commission they had tried a rendering using different textures and materials, but it "became a spotty type of development" and he would rather use more "subtle changes" such as different colors behind stairways and changes in the windows to produce the desired effect. Roseth earlier had told the commission that the staff "leaned" toward agreeing with the applicant.

"Our challenge to you (Hodgens), is don't make it look like one big complex," Keeble told the architect, adding he didn't care how that was accomplished.

The commission voted to accept the staff recommendations with commissioners' comments; design review should continue at the Aug. 20 meeting.

THOUGH ROBERTS observed that there was a big difference between an "addition to the Oliver White building and an addition to the Oliver White north wall," the commission voted to waive additional parking requirements for Alan Fox and the new second story on the Dolores Street building.

Fox and his architect Daryl Hawkins had received their permits earlier this year to remodel the first floor commercial space and add a second floor with four apartments to the Oliver White building near the corner of Dolores Street and Eighth Avenue.

However, when construction began, demolition left only one wall and the foundation of the building, which far exceeded the [illegible] expectations. Electrical needed, for example, the work and it could be determined by the commission whether it was, in fact, the construction of a new building or a remodeling of an existing one.

If the commission decided that it was a complete demolition, then the requirements for a use permit would have to conform to new construction. The building plans met those requirements with the exception of two more parking spaces.

BEHIND THE LINES

BY MICHAEL GARDNER

City council to pack its bags?

IF YOU come to Carmel City Hall Aug. 5 for a council meeting, don't be surprised to find no lines, no tourists and no police security.

But don't get your hopes up for easy access. You will also probably find no meeting.

Mayor Clint Eastwood apparently has been forced to seriously consider surrendering to the crowds and may soon ask that council meetings be relocated to the Carmel Women's Club.

It was just a few weeks ago that Clint pleaded with residents to have a little patience and promised to act if the crowds lined up for hours to get into council meetings did not thin out.

But it appears that Clint — stung by the growing criticism over difficulties residents have in getting into their council meetings — is ready to seriously consider a change of scenery for the council.

Aide Sue Hutchinson has confirmed that she and Carmel Women's Club representatives have met about the possibility of council meetings at the facility on San Carlos Street directly across from Sunset Center.

Sue explains that Clint at first believed that the crowd problem would remedy itself once the novelty of Dirty Harry, the mayor, wore off. "It apparently isn't going to," she conceded.

The Carmel Women's Club building can hold at least 200 people — nearly triple the capacity of the council chambers. A stage would give the audience a good view of Clint and accesses can easily be watched for security precautions.

In addition, by the time 4 o'clock rolls around there should be plenty of available parking at Sunset Center and along San Carlos Street. That should make Councilwoman Helen Arnold very happy, who at the last meeting was saved by Bud Allen generously allowing her to park at his neighboring inn.

"It looks like a possibility. It really does," Sue said.

A relocation no doubt will blunt Clint's critics and also will stave off any future complaints via letters to the district attorney about violations of the Brown Act.

Look for a council meeting before long to discuss whether to move and, if so, adoption of the necessary resolutions to implement the relocation.

Someone ought to give city hall a call and say thanks for responding.

ANNEX RERUN SEASON

Summer is rerun time and Carmel is no different from the rest of the country.

The continuing saga of a proposed Harrison Memorial Library annex is like syndicated reruns of MASH — you've seen it all at least three times yet every night you find some excuse to watch again.

Such is the $1 million annex story. For at least 25 years the city has been trying to solve the space problems for the library yet each time a solution is near there's some excuse to play it again.

This time around the city council has dumped the annex dilemma into the lap of the library board of trustees for a decision. We would need more than fingers and toes if someone asked to add up the number of annex votes trustees and the council have made in the past five years I've been covering the beat.

So it's time to add up votes again.

On the library board, we have pro-annexers Jack Billwiller and Tom Duffy, although Tom is somewhat reluctant. In the middle forming the key undecided bloc are George Rommel and John Kennedy. Selden Smith, although never casting a vote, has said he opposes the annex concept.

Final (Do I dare say final?) vote is set for July 31 with the issue going to the council Aug. 5.

Naturally, council members are not talking about how the vote will go. But based on past comments in campaigns and at meetings, it appears that James Wright is a definite pro-annex while Bob Fischer and Helen Arnold oppose, although Helen is more likely to change her mind than Bob. Clint and Elinor Laiolo are undecided.

TOURISTS LINE up to view the Carmel City Council proceedings hours before the meetings begin. Those backed away from the stairs by security amuse themselves while waiting by reading the agenda posted outside. Because of the crowds, the city is considering moving council meetings to the Carmel Women's Club. (Michael Gardner photo.)

Let's play some. Assume that Elinor sides with the annex and it's a 2-2 tie with Clint, who casts his vote last, holding the deciding card. What will he do?

Whatever the library board wants, is his answer.

So based on today's best guess, the library board vote of July 31 is extremely crucial since it will probably sway at least two council votes — Clint's and Elinor's.

The question that must be answered is whether the amount of extra space provided by the annex is worth the estimated $1 million price tag. Methinks there's a majority of folks out there who won't answer yes.

MORE ANNEX QUESTIONS

Speaking of, perhaps someday there will be an official accounting of the costs of the library annex — sort of like what the city did on Piccadilly Park a few years back.

Like how much architects have cost us? The past council, by rejecting a large annex forced library trustees to eat about $55,000 in fees. The new annex fees will be about the same. This time the city is paying, but it still all comes out of the same pocket — that of the taxpayer. And don't forget about the model of the plan for a Sunset Center library.

Looking back over the years, the land cost, numerous schemes, environmental assessments, staff time, elections, et. al. probably would add up to a staggering sum that would make Piccadilly's price tag seem like a K-Mart blue light special.

And the thing hasn't even been built yet.

KARIN'S LAWSUIT CONCERNS

While chatting with Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman Tuesday a.m., she raised an interesting point about the Carmel City Council.

Karin naturally listened with great interest when the three new council members (Clint, Bob and Elinor) promised to abandon lawsuits pushed by the former council. The suits all involve the county of Monterey.

But she says that county counsel has indicated that so far not a single lawsuit has been formally dropped. The council did vote not to pursue the Odello and Spanish Bay suits.

Karin questions whether the Odello issue must go back to the courts for certification of compliance since no formal action apparently has been taken by the city legal beagles.

Although not specifically citing the case, Karin no doubt is concerned that the council has not dropped the Carmel Valley Master Plan suit. By not dropping the case, the county must re-petition the court for certification, a costly and time-consuming process.

All of this raises questions about how a suit is dropped, at what point and what the effects are. Might be a good subject for a council report come Aug. 5 should Karin ask Clint to put it on the agenda.

MISSION RANCH SETS PRECEDENT

The San Jose Court of Appeals "certified for publication" its pro-city decision on Mission Ranch — a case reported elsewhere in this issue.

Certified for publication means that the case will be printed in law journals and referenced as a precedent in future similar court litigation.

CHARLOTTE OFF TO JAPAN

Former Mayor Charlotte Townsend is off to Japan later this month to speak on "maintaining community identities" in these days of developmental pressures.

Her talk will be in Karuizawa, a community similar to Carmel that is trying to stave off Japanese versions of McDonald's, K-Mart and Clintville.

Later in Tokyo, C.T. has been asked to speak on the media's influence in elections — a subject she obviously is well versed in.

It will be her second recent trip to Japan. Just last year C.T. was in Hiroshima and Nagasaki speaking at a peace conference on the 40th anniversary of the A-bombing of those two cities.

Rockets' red glared!

Charlie Thomas provides thrust for Rockets

By SAM SALERNO

FOR A boy who was only interested in cars, Charlie Thomas has come a long way.

Not a "rags to riches" story but one that should inspire every American in this country that it's possible to rise above it all through hard work, perseverance, and a keen business sense. As they say in the business world, he has a "third sense": knows when and where to invest. His timing has been superb.

Charlie Thomas, owner of the National Basketball Association Western Division Champion Houston Rockets, has a home in Pebble Beach where he and his wife Kitzie spend as much time as possible. That time amounts to a cumulative total of three months a year.

Thomas' ambition was to be a car salesman and that ambition drove him to bigger and more impressive credentials.

"I loved cars, everything about them, and I loved to restore them . . . I was a car nut!" he says. Thomas learned every facet of the car business, from a "parts runner" (going from one agency to another to pick up parts), to sales and management. He learned everything and anything associated with cars. "Cars intrigued me," he says.

He began in Knoxville, Tenn., and adapted quickly to become a phenomenon in the car business. Time spent on the job never fazed him because he was totally absorbed in his work. Hours never bothered him either, it was nothing for him to work seven days a week, eight to 15 hours per day. When Thomas had a day off, he visited other car agencies with his three baby girls. It was a Sunday drive for the family. His wife Kitzie adds, "that's what the girls thought they were supposed to do on weekends."

Thomas kicked back and forth from assistant new car manager to used car manager to general manager, and after 16 years of diligent work, he became a car dealer. In the vernacular of today's car talk, Thomas is considered a "Mega Dealer," that is, someone who has 20 or more car dealerships in the United States.

Thomas has his hand in many financial enterprises, including sports, real estate, oil, banking, raising registered Longhorn steers at his ranch in Blanco, Texas, and auto dealerships. But his greatest love is cars. He says, "I enjoy cars more than anything I do."

HOW DID Charlie and Kitzie Thomas get involved in sports and the Houston Rockets? At his home in Pebble Beach Thomas explained it this way. "Two friends told me that the National Basketball Association was negotiating a contract with a salary cap, eliminating a team from paying more than 53 percent of gross . . . also that along with cable TV and the increase in TV audiences, it would be a good business investment. In other words, my friends said it was a good business proposition."

As was mentioned earlier, his "third sense" told him to jump in. To further assure him of his financial move his friends were very knowledgeable in both fields. One friend was in the NBA, and the other friend was involved in TV, so they knew what they were talking about.

The Thomases acquired the Houston Rockets in 1982. It was a money-losing team for years and when the owner died, his heirs, who were in Arizona, decided to sell. At that time, teams in the National Basketball Association sold in the $10 million range. Now, according to Thomas, one must put up $25 million to buy into an NBA franchise.

In 1982, when Thomas acquired the Rockets, Moses Malone, their top player and star, became a free agent. The Philadelphia 76ers made Malone an offer "he couldn't refuse," $14 million for six years and in turn the Rockets would receive a first round draft choice and Caldwell Jones, a good player, and a Cleveland pick which Philadelphia had a right to; that pick was Rodney McCray, who played at Louisville. Because of their standing in the West, which was in the cellar, the Rockets got the first flip of the coin and that brought them the first of the "Twin Towers," Ralph Sampson from Virginia.

CHARLIE THOMAS, owner of the NBA Houston Rockets and part-time Pebble Beach resident, points to a reproduction of a magazine article written about him hanging on one of the walls of his Pebble Beach home. Next to it is a poster commemorating Ralph Sampson's first game with the Rockets, given to him by the rival Dallas Mavericks. (Holly McFarland photo.)

BEFORE THOMAS bought the Rockets, they had won only 14 games. Del Harris was the coach in 1982. When the Boston Celtics sold in 1983, Bill Fitch knew it was time to move on because of the uncertainty of his position, even though he was a winner in Boston. Ray Patterson, Houston's general manager, knew Bill Fitch and through their relationship, the marriage was made.

In his first year, Fitch doubled the Rockets' wins, going from 14 to 28. Even though the Rockets improved 100 percent, they were still mired in the cellar. And again they received the flip of the coin and, as fate would have it, Thomas won the toss and selected Akeem Olajuwon from Houston

TV star caught 'moonlighting' at Monastery

By MAC McDONALD

ACTOR BRUCE Willis was in town last week, moonlighting on the set of director Blake Edwards' latest opus Blind Date.

But the only way you would have known that any filming was going on last Friday at Monastery Beach was if you took a walk to the extreme north end of the beach. The film crew was in "town" last week for a less-than-one-day shoot: in at nine, out at five, all for two brief scenes and a photo session for publicity stills for the movie.

Willis, the popular co-star of ABC's hit series Moonlighting, joined co-star Kim Basinger and director Edwards (Pink Panther, S.O.B., 10, Victor-Victoria) for the brief shoot, which will be used for the epilogue of the film. The final scenes, in fact, will have no dialogue, but form the backdrop as the credits roll by.

The film concerns a man (Willis) who is set up with a blind date (Basinger) for the big company party. He's warned, however, not to let any alcohol touch her lips, or he'd rue the consequences. Therein lies the comedic premise of the film, the latest in a long line of comedies by the prolific Edwards, best known for his hit films with his wife Julie Andrews (Victor-Victoria, 10, S.O.B.), Dudley Moore (10), and Peter Sellers (Pink Panther).

Willis, who came out of nowhere last year to star in the smash series with co-star Cybil Shepard, had to return to the set of Moonlighting Monday to start filming new episodes for the fall.

Meanwhile at Monastery Beach (actually a promontory overlooking the beach), local stand-ins Ellen Winchell and Stan Lockwood, both of Carmel, had to endure a hot sun and interminable shuffling of cameras, lights and reflectors as Edwards and producer Tony Adams set the scene. The scene was a picnic spread overlooking the beach, with Point Lobos in the background and a sports car sporting a "Just Married" sign in the foreground.

Lockwood and Winchell, from Central Coast Production Services (Winchell is a co-owner), which provides for a variety of film production services, were accustomed to all the waiting. "You get used to it," said Lockwood smiling and shrugging.

After what seemed like hours of setting up, Willis and Basinger exited their respective trailers for the actual shooting, which took less than 30 minutes.

After the shoot, Willis and Basinger walked down to the beach, where photographer Tony Shapiro, well known for his covers of Time, Life and other magazines, took portraits of the two, apparently for publicity stills for the film. Two girls in bathing suits stood at a distance and quietly watched the proceedings.

Cut, that's a wrap. The production crew started to pack up the equipment, Edwards discussed the shoot with Adams, and Willis and Basinger retreated to their trailers. The small group of onlookers drifted away. All in a day's work.

As we were leaving the sound man was facetiously lamenting his predicament. "All this sound equipment," he said, waving at a huge tractor trailer filled with cables, microphones and booms, "and we didn't even need any of it."

That's show biz.

IT'S HURRY up and wait time for Bruce Willis and Kim Basinger stand-ins Ellen Winchell and Stan Lockwood of Carmel as they await instructions from director Blake Edwards on the set of Edwards' new flick Blind Date at Monastery Beach. (Michael Gardner photo.)

University and that was the start of the "Twin Towers" strategy in the NBA . . . Ralph Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon. The acquisition of the two tall men, according to sports experts, has revolutionized the NBA. The reason? Well, since the innovation of the "Twin Towers" concept, other clubs who felt a team couldn't function with two tall men (as in the case of Houston) are now drafting and trading for the taller player, that is, 6 feet 10 inches and above.

In Fitch's second year, the Rockets won 48 games. The rest is history, because in his third year as coach, Bill Fitch and the Houston Rockets won 7 out of 8 pre-season games and 51 out of 82 regular season games, becoming Mid-West and Western Champions and then losing to the Boston Celtics in the sixth game of their best-of-7 series. To put it in Thomas' words, "we went from average to worse, to the second best in the National Basketball Association."

To dispel any rumors of trading Ralph Sampson, which has been the conversation in sports circles and in the media, Thomas remarks emphatically, "I have no intention of trading either Sampson or Olajuwon."

We asked Thomas what impact the Rockets have made on the city of Houston and he was quick to answer.

"The oil and banking business had been suffering in our area and the Rockets were the tonic that the city needed to come alive again with support and excitement, which was lacking at the time," he said. "It was a real shot in the arm. Now the city has 'Rockets Fever.' And we're sold out for next year, that is, 14,000 of the 16,000 seats."

Thomas reserves 2,000 seats for those who cannot afford season tickets and for unexpected VIPs, etc. whom he can accommodate. For the "regulars" requesting additional seats, Thomas and the Rockets have put them on a "priority" system .

WHAT BROUGHT Charlie and Kitzie to Pebble Beach?

Thomas says, "we've always come out and stayed in San Francisco due to an interest I've had in the Stanford Court Hotel for 12 years. And during one of our sightseeing trips with our three daughters, Tracy, Kelly, and Robin, we had lunch at the Lodge at Pebble Beach, drove around the forest and fell in love . . . plus, at the time, it was very hot in Texas."

Charlie was glancing at the Wall Street Journal and saw a house listed in this area. He called the realtor and wanted to look at the house.

"I looked at six or seven," he says, "but couldn't find one with a view and they weren't big enough for our size family," he says. "Finally, we looked at one at Pebble Beach, owned by an older couple about to move to Florida. This house, incidentally, had a view of the ocean, Pt. Lobos, etc., and we fell in love with it.

The Thomases live here at least three months of each year and love the area. "The people are so gentle . . . we are here strictly for fun and relaxation and never get tired of this area as we have the other area," Kitzie says.

And where do you find the Thomases when they're not at home? Try Hammerhead's, the Beach and Tennis Club, Jack London's, maybe Bud's Pub, or chatting with Mayor Clint Eastwood at the Hog's. They enjoy being with the "real people" because, with all their wealth and popularity, they are "real people," loved by all who have met them and known them.

CARMEL RIVER WATER NEWS

BY HENRIETTA STERN

Talking in concrete terms

WITH ALL the talk about the increased demand for water and issues surrounding the proposed San Clemente Dam, few people are well informed about the physical project.

The purpose of today's column is to discuss in "concrete terms" just what the New San Clemente Project would entail. Where is the proposed site? What would the new dam look like? How would it be constructed? What facilities are included? How large would the new reservoir be? How much would it cost? And why is it called "San Clemente Dam" anyway? Answers to these questions, based on our engineering consultant's recent presentation on the "Preliminary Design and Cost Estimate," follow.

WHERE IS SAN CLEMENTE?

Do you know the way to San Clemente? Probably not, as the existing dam belongs to Cal-Am Water Company and is tucked away on private property, up the steep, narrow canyon near the Sleepy Hollow subdivision. It is located about 3.5 miles southeast of Carmel Valley Village, 18 river miles upstream from Carmel Bay. The new dam would be about 3,600 feet downstream from the existing dam, and would also not be visible to the general public. San Clemente Creek flows into the Carmel River near the existing dam, hence the name "San Clemente Dam."

WHAT KIND OF DAM IS IT?

Dams come in various shapes, sizes and materials, based on several factors. These include canyon shape, soil and rock conditions, the availability of building materials nearby, seismic conditions, construction time and project purpose. Some, like the existing San Clemente Dam, consist of a thin concrete arch spanning the river. Others, like the Los Padres Dam, are basically a massive mound of earth holding the water back — an earthfill gravity dam. The New San Clemente Dam would be a new type of gravity dam, a roller-compacted concrete (RCC) dam.

Picture a construction crew building a new section of freeway somewhere along Highway 1. Now relocate that scene to the proposed dam site. Instead of just one 12-inch layer of road, imagine stacking layer upon layer across the canyon, 300 feet high! Add lots of concrete grout for extra strength and leak prevention, crews working around the clock for seven to nine months, and you have a fair description of the RCC process. The finished product would be sail-shaped in cross section, with a vertical upstream face and a steeply sloped downstream face. This design saves us money due to less material required and faster construction time.

A FEW STATISTICS

A few statistics: the proposed dam would be 300 feet high, 20 feet thick and span 900 feet at the crest elevation of 689 feet. At the spillway elevation of 662 feet, a 29,000 ac. ft. reservoir encompassing about 350 surface acres would be created. The existing dam and reservoir would be inundated by the new project.

WHAT ABOUT THE OVERFLOW?

Because the new dam and reservoir cannot store all the annual river flow, a spillway safely passes flood water overflow to the river below. Though a stilling basic helps dissipate the energy of the cascading water, kayaking nearby is not recommended! Since flowing water can be harnessed for energy, a powerhouse for hydroelectric generation is part of the project design. Actual installation of machinery and equipment is not planned until energy prices increase to a level where such an investment would be cost effective.

The main purpose of the dam is to store water for dry periods of the year, and a vertical series of seven intakes is planned to draw water from the reservoir at various levels. The temperature of discharged water can also be regulated by selective use of the intake valves.

WHAT ABOUT FISH IN THE RIVER?

Fish passage facilities to help up- and downstream-migrating steelhead trout over the dam are integral to the project. District staff, our engineering and fishery consultants, and the State Department of Fish and Game are working closely to design appropriate facilities for the fish.

Adults migrating upstream will be "trapped and trucked" to release sites upstream, thus sparing them the arduous task of scaling a 300-foot fish ladder. Smolts migrating downstream will be collected by a "fish horn" and safely transmitted to the downstream side of the dam via a series of screens and flexible pipe. No charge for the ride!

SO WHAT DO WE GET IN THE END?

And what do you get for all these facilities? Water for existing and future needs, drought protection, and an enhanced river environment. What will all this cost? The latest estimate is $46.1 million in capital costs, including access roads. Annual operating and maintenance costs should run about $515,000. For more information, readers are welcome to peruse Converse Consultants' report, available at the district office.

(Editor's note: The Carmel River Water News is a bi-weekly column written by Monterey Peninsula Water Management District staff. Its purpose is to inform Pine Cone readers about district activities relating to the Carmel River and its environs. For more information or suggested topics, readers are invited to contact Henrietta Stern at 649-4866 or P.O. Box 85, Monterey 93940.)

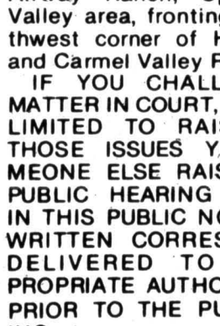
"JUST A HEADACHE," YOU SAY

Nearly every adult, at some time or another, suffers simple headaches from body abuse such as lack of sleep, sudden anxiety, emotional stress, excessive smoking, or excessive drinking. But more than 20 million Americans experience the pain of chronic recurring headaces. It is with these sufferers that chiropractic is vitally concerned.

Research has shown that about 90 percent of chronic headaches are caused by mechanical irritation of the nerveroots in the neck, usually dating back to some previous trauma. This nerve root irritation may have been caused by minor neck injuries not even recognized as trauma by the patient. Injury to the neck produces a mechanical derangement of the bony structures which in turn causes the irritation of the nerve roots. The many nerves and blood vessels in the neck exert their function on the painful areas of the scalp, face and brain, and when the body is placed under stress, the headaches develop.



DR. BEACHAM

A variety of drugs has been made available for the "supposed" cure of "relief" of headache conditions, but at best these products have afforded little more than temporary relief from headache symptoms.

No thereapeutic method even remotely approaches the value of chiropractic science in the correction of the neck abnormalities that are the cause of a great percentage of headaches.

HEART ASSOCIATION HONORS THREE FOR CPR SAVES

The Central Mission Trails Chapter of the American Heart Association honored three people for saving two lives using cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

On May 3, 1986, Judy Laguens was at a Monterey restaurant when an eight-month-old baby at a nearby table choked on a tortilla chip. The father unsuccessfully tried to remove it. Laguens saw that the child was not breathing and was able to dislodge the chip using cardiopulmonary resuscitation procedures. After the obstruction was removed, the child began breathing with no further assistance.

Laguens had completed a cardiopulmonary recertification class at Seaside High School a few days prior to the incident.

The other two individuals that the heart association has recognized are former A-1 Ambulance employees Bruce Forsyth and Rick Cokley, who revived a person who suffered a heart attack last fall in a Salinas restaurant.

This past year 300 heart association instructors have trained or recertified 7,819 area residents in cardiopulmonary resuscitation. Anyone who would like to learn this life-saving procedure should call the American Heart Association for information on enrolling in a class.

BUSINESS BEAT
BY NANCY HILLS

Anyone there?

WHAT'S GOING on around Carmel? As of July 14, there hasn't been one business license application this month and only nine applications in June.

Compare that with 1983 when 19 were submitted in June and 19 in July, 1984 when 16 were submitted in June and 22 in July and 1985, 18 applications in June and 10 in July.

Maybe we should bring back everybody's favorite group, the Carmel Business License and Code Review Board, to do their "Greatest Hits" from the past.

Speculation on why no licenses ranges from no one is applying because they don't think they need a business license — tsk, tsk — to no one is selling or changing their business with hopes of a marvelous summer, which, I hear, hasn't exactly turned out that way — though many seemed to have a good Fourth of July.

If you're one of those who thinks disbanding of the licensing board means you don't have to have a license, best think again. Not so, my friends. The business license is a time honored requirement in almost every municipality, one no city will surrender without a fight.

It's one way the city knows who to tax; someone without a license is letting everyone else pay the bills.

It was interesting going through past licenses. Like browsing through one's old high school yearbook. Names almost forgotten jog one's memory and the number of businesses that have changed hands or gone out of business since they applied for a license is staggering. I didn't count them so it might be a false impression, but it sure seemed like a lot.

There also were some of those "legendary" encounters between the city and business district chronicled, such as La Playa, Sprouse-Rietz Variety Store, the beginning of the Surf About store, and all that. It was fun to look over — which only goes to show that I've been here too long.

WHAT'S THIS all mean? Who knows?

However, the city has thoughtfully provided us all with information about businesses in Carmel.

The Carmel-by-the-Sea Three Phase Implementation Program Draft Phase One Report by Denise Duffy & Associates issued in June is not only has a real impressive title, but is a comprehensive report with lots of business goodies.

In this report, the consultants ran around and did research on "economic trends," compared the economy in Del Mar in Southern California and counted the numbers and types of businesses in town.

Why Del Mar? Because it has many of the same characteristics as Carmel — similar population size, close to a large city (San Diego) and is a seaside town with tourists.

No doubt, it will come as a big surprise that, according to the survey, 50 percent of businesses in town are primarily visitor-serving, resident-serving businesses account for 25 percent and combined resident/visitor-serving businesses, 25 percent.

• There is no specific type of commercial business significantly predominating over other businesses. The total existing commercial business establishments consist of 49 percent retail good, 39 percent services and 12 percent retail foods.

• Apparel shops (84 clothing, 11 shoes) are the winners, placing first as 14 percent of all businesses in Carmel. Offices (36 real estate, 15 medical/dental, 41 other) is next as 13 percent.

• About 72 percent of all retail businesses consist of five major uses — apparel stores, restaurants, art galleries, gift/novelty stores and jewelry stores. Those businesses have remained in the top five commercial land use since 1973.

Of some note is that the number of jewelry stores has increased by 170 percent since 1973 while sewing/hobby/craft/sporting goods stores have decreased by 50 percent.

Which makes for some interesting conjectures on what new hobbies and sports people are indulging in.

• About 81 percent of all sales made in Carmel are made by businesses primarily oriented to visitors. That compares to 1975, when 71 percent of the total sales were by visitor-oriented businesses.

• Based on comparisons of Carmel-by-the-Sea per capita sales with those of Del Mar, it is estimated that almost all of the apparel, home furnishings/appliances and other retail store sales and approximately one-half of restaurant sales are made to non-residents.

• Historically, inflation adjusted sales in Carmel grew between 1975 and 1984, but more slowly than statewide sales. The visitor-oriented portion of Carmel's economy appears to be more stable and subject to fewer sales fluctuations during this period than do resident-serving businesses.

The report also states that a "number of business persons interviewed felt a slowdown in their rate of sales growth in the past five years."

Of course, how many have survived for five years is another question entirely.

• Retail vacancy rates are low and rents are high, indicating strong demand. Strong demand for retail space by new businesses compensates for vacancies due to business failures or relocations. Duffy & Associates received that information from interviews with real estate brokers. Rents are relatively high compared to California overall, which $2 to $4 a square foot for prime locations on or near Ocean Avenue and less desirable spaces for 75 cents to $2 a square foot.

The vacancy rate in Carmel was indicated to be around .5 percent to 3 percent, much lower than 13.4 percent to 22.2 percent cited for San Francisco and San Jose.

Rent increases have been "slightly above" the inflation rate and expiring long-term leases can result in large rent increases in one fell swoop. That may have caused some businesses to fail, but others have taken their place. Most businesses plan to stay on after the lease expires. Most business people also felt high rents were affecting the type of business in town, going from high-priced to high volume.

Also, the business survey indicates that rents "averaged" 10 percent of gross sales, not beyond what the businesses can generally pay.

• Retail goods comprises 49 percent of the city's total businesses, with retail food sales comprising 12 percent of the total and services making up the remaining 39 percent of total businesses.

• The highest quarterly sales in the 1975-1984 period are during the third quarter, which includes the summer peak. That's followed by the fourth quarter, which includes the Christmas season — a time, I'm told, when sales are down in Carmel, so who's zooming who here?

BUSINESS BEAT
BY NANCY HILLS

THE GREATEST influx of businesses was during the period between 1970 and 1980, the report states.

There's a catch, though. The report goes on to state that "while there has been an increase in the total number of visitor-serving businesses since 1973, there has been a decline in total number of these businesses between 1980 and 1985, especially in art galleries."

Also, while the total number of businesses increased until 1980, the total number decreased after that from 685 to 684.

The decrease was in retail goods from 370 in 1980 and 335 in 1985 and in retail foods from 93 to 83 respectively. However, the total number of services increased from 222 in 1980 to 266 in 1985. Numbers for individual types of businesses within those categories vary.

The report cites a Carmel Business Association August 1985 newsletter which described the makeup of the town in 1955 as 37 apparel stores; 26 restaurants; 26 gift shops; 26 stores selling household furnishings, appliances and housewares; 12 hobby, craft and sporting stores; 11 horticultural supply stores; seven jewelry stores; and (you must be kidding) three art galleries.

There were also 45 inns, hotels and lodges, "more than exist today in Carmel's commercial zone," the report states.

Does Gunnar Norberg know about this?

Anyway, if you want to read the report — it has all kinds of other information about Carmel in it — the library has a copy. There are more charts and graphs about businesses.

NOT SHEEPISH

The Paradise Building mezzanine has a new tenant, Carmel Cotton and Fleece.

This fleece isn't from those woolly little beasties romping on the hillside, but from those not so little plants growing wherever cotton grows these days. Co-owner Bonnie Johnson (with her husband Chris) says the fleece is cotton, including all kinds of cotton "sweats" along with cotton shirts and T-shirts.

The Johnsons own another cotton and fleece store in Sausalito which Johnson said their son, Mark, operates. Bonnie and Chris Johnson are comtemplating moving here.

PICTURE PERFECT

Chris Hickey, Richard Stone and Joseph Daab have banded together to open Framemaster's in Mission Court on Mission Street between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

It's a wholesale framing store, Daab explained, that specializes in conservation framing. Pictures are framed to eliminate the disintegration and discoloring from acids present in many types of paper and wood. Daab added they also have available special "ultraviolet" plexiglass that keeps out harmful light and they seal the artwork inside the frame.

Matting is another specialty for the trio, Daab said, and they will do sculpted matting — which employs the use of colored inlays — and "intricate French line work using pens to create an effect on the paper." Matting is as much an art as the artwork it frames.

Hickey and Stone, he said, also have a store in San Francisco.

RAILROAD MYSTERY WEEKEND CAPER

A train ride of intrigue and surprises filled with 155 Hollywood celebrities and guests will be boarding completely restored 1940s vintage railroad cars at Union Station in downtown Los Angeles at 8:45 a.m., July 18, bound for the Monterey Plaza Hotel.

The "Railroad Mystery Weekend Caper," underwritten in part by Parfums Givenchy and Lincoln-Mercury, is set for Friday-Sunday, July 18-20, and is sponsored on behalf of Vital Options, the nation's first psychosocial support organization for young adults with cancer (from 17 to 40).

Among the attending media will be Robin Leach and his crew from Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous, who will cover a segment on how the well-to-do benefit charitable organizations.

"I chose the Monterey Plaza because, after visiting the area, I felt this was the hotel which had the ambiance and elegance that I wanted for this glamorous affair," said Selma Schimmel, founder and executive director of Vital Options. "Also, Cannery Row is a historical landmark which speaks of mystery."

Among the anticipated attendees are Tony Curtis, LeVar Burton, Virginia Mayo, Olivia Hussey, Robert Prosky (Hill Street Blues), Pat Peterson (Knot's Landing), and Albert Haigue (Fame), with other major names to be confirmed shortly. For further information, contact Vital Options at (818) 508-5657.

Enroute, unusual and "suspicious" highjinks will begin to unfold from Capers, the mystery and adventure experts. Figuring prominently in the weekend mystery scenario will be two 7-ft. crystal bottles of Ysatis Perfume by Givenchy. Mystery winners will receive a round trip for two to Paris, courtesy of Air France.

Highlight of the weekend will be a black tie optional Grand Ball in Monterey Plaza's Del Mar Ballroom with celebrity entertainment, a regally elegant dinner and fine wines. Also included in the price of $1,946 per couple (the year in which the mystery begins), are first-class 40s vintage rail transport and fine dining to and from Monterey, two nights in the Monterey Plaza Hotel, champagne reception and most meals.

Because of the tremendous efforts of the local community, the Grand Ball on Saturday, July 19, may be attended at a cost of $75 per person.

Champagne cocktails begin at 8 p.m., followed by a dinner/dance at 9 p.m. Entertainment for the evening will include Andy Gibb, Mary Wilson (formerly with The Supremes), comedian Taylor Negron and a very special surprise guest. For reservations, please contact Magdy Ibrahim at 646-1700, ext. 5009.

Proceeds benefit Vital Options, which offers support and counseling by health care professionals with all services free to participants, their family members and friends.

Vital Options was created in 1984 by Selma Schimmel, who at age 28 discovered that she had breast cancer, but that no psychosocial support groups existed for cancer patients her age.

WALTER E. STEWART of Carmel Valley, chairman of the Monterey County Committee Guide Dogs for the Blind and recently elected to the board of directors for the national organization based in San Rafael, will host the board at its bi-monthly meeting Aug. 9-10. The weekend will feature a dinner party at the home of Mrs. Virginia Stanton, a fund-raiser for the project. Stewart, seen here with his two pet Rottweilers, Nicholas and Juno, serves as tour docent at the San Rafael campus of Guide Dogs. In addition, Stewart is also president of Del Monte Aviation and Air Crew Ltd., a member of the Monterey airport advisory committee and the international flight committee of National Business Aircraft Association.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

If you want to live to be 100 years old, the key may be moderation. That's the conclusion of psychologist Arthur N. Schwartz of the University of Southern California after studying 100 centenarians. "They didn't overeat or undereat," he said. "If they drank, they drank moderately. The worked conscientiously, but they were not workaholics. Most slept not more or less than eight hours a night." Even their exercise schedules were moderate, Schwartz noted. "Throughout their adulthood they were the walkers rather than the runners. They were not like the five-mile-a-day jogger you see so much of today. And they pursued sports and hobbies as forms of relaxation rather than as obsessions."

A FORTUNE COLLECTED IN TOLLS

Does Point Carmel Toll Gate exist legally and are tolls collected unlawfully? Public opinion throughout Monterey Peninsula, as far as learned by the Pine Cone, indicates that such is the fact. If so, the proper authorities should relieve the public from the burden of paying a tax when visiting this most attractive point on our coast. Within the memory of residents of Carmel and other places on the Peninsula a public thoroughfare gave entrance to Point "Lobos" as Point Carmel was then (and is now) locally known. The Pine Cone believes that such public thoroughfare should be at once re-established and perpetuated.

PARKING LIMIT ON OCEAN STRIKES SNAG WITH HIGH SIGN COST

The city has struck a snag in the process of putting into effect the two-hour parking limit on Ocean Avenue. An estimate has been made of the cost of installing the necessary signs, without which the resolution passed at the request of Ocean Avenue merchants cannot be enforced. The cost will be something over $500. And the city can't spend more than $500 at a time on one project, without calling a bond election. What to do? It is reported that Street Commissioner Thoburn, who thinks there are already too many laws and restrictions, is agin' parking time limits, and voted no on the resolution, is chuckling up his sleeve.

HIGH SCHOOL DROPS RUSSIAN, LATIN IV FROM CURRICULUM

Carmel High School has dropped several courses from its curriculum, mostly because of insufficient enrollment, and the school board last night indicated it might want to learn more about why interest has ebbed in certain of them.

Eliminated in the 1961-62 school year will be Math I, a course in basic arithmetic, because of insufficient enrollment, and because Math II covers "about the same material"; Latin IV, for the same reason.

Journalism was dropped as a course but retained as an extra-curricular activity, reading sections were cut from eight to three because of anticipated summer school results, and driver training was moved to summer school only. Music, primarily instrumental, will be curtailed to allow the teacher to operate in two schools.

CITY EMPLOYEES' MORALE SAID TO BE LOW

"The morale among city employees is the worst in 30 years," a city employee claimed last week.

"Morale?" another said later, "There is no morale."

Although salary negotiation time, at the end of each fiscal year, commonly gives life to a certain amount of employee-council adversity, this year's negotiations appear to have created more than their share of ill feelings.

"Inferences, dark clouds and hearsay," are the words one employee used to describe what's going on right now.

CVPOA TO SEEK BUILDING HALT

The Carmel Valley Property Owners Association will recommend that development be halted in the Valley when air pollution reaches certain levels.

The CVPOA board of directors, at its regular meeting July 8 at Los Laureles Lodge, approved a recommendation from member Earl Moser to establish a specific standard for air pollution levels in the Valley. If the standard is exceeded for four hours in any month, no building permit should be issued for one year. The board agreed.

Painting awaits, library to close

HARRISON MEMORIAL Library will close for three days next week so that the reading room can be painted.

Library Director Margaret Pelikan said the facility will be closed July 22-23 and for most of July 24. The library will reopen at 5 p.m. Thursday, July 24, she said.

The facility has to be closed because painters must use scaffolding, which could pose a danger to patrons, Pelikan indicated.

A second closing in August will occur so that new carpets can be installed in the library. The area of the fiction stacks will be painted later, Pelikan said.

New people, new ideas

NEW PROGRAMS, new people, new ideas, and a new direction is news today at the Carmel Youth Center.

As you know, the CYC has just been through some growing pains and the community has helped wonderfully! It is my intention to repay that help by creating, organizing, and developing new projects that involve our children, community schools and businesses. For that reason, I am creating two CYC Youth Commissions on recreation programs.

These are for students 12-18 years of age who would like to help design new programs. Come to the CYC for more information. The more ideas we have, the more input we need. Here's a short list:

Surfing events, skateboard events, soapbox derby, R/C model races, New Wave dances, movie marathons, beauty pageants, and CYC Theatre.

Believe me, there's a lot more. That's not even mentioning our fabulous chef Cathleen Connell's lunch menu, with hot and cold turkey and ham sandwiches, hot dogs, burgers, mini-pizzas, and so on, or our dinner menu with Italian, Mexican, barbecue, or "Hamburger Porkout" main entrees. These are as attractive to your pocketbook as your taste buds too.

We would like to have your whole family with us for dinner sometime. So all you people who have been saving your green M&Ms, come on up to the Carmel Youth Center, and trade them in on a good time.

Stroll planned at wildlife refuge

The California Native Plant Society will sponsor a Saturday, July 19 field trip to the Salinas Wildlife Refuge.

Monterey's newest planning commissioner, Jo Stallard, will lead this stroll through the refuge noting birds and plants of the area. Meet 10 a.m. at the Seaside K-Mart to carpool.

Bring lunch and water, if desired, for the hike which will conclude at 1 p.m. For details, call 375-9357.

Summer specials for tennis players

The Hyatt Regency Monterey and the City of Monterey Parks and Recreation Department are presenting a special reduced tennis court user fee rate this summer at the Hyatt Regency Monterey.

The regular court fee rate of $15 per hour will be reduced to $7.50 per hour for Monterey residents on a space-available basis.

Hyatt Regency Monterey Tennis Facilities include six championship tennis courts, two lighted courts, a pro shop and lessons under the direction of Vic Brown, USPTA. For reservations, call 647-2029.

Big Sur bike trek organized

An eight-day bike trek down California's Big Sur coastline, from Santa Cruz to Santa Barbara, is planned by the American Lung Association.

The trek is designed as a benefit for the association, which provides organization, support and training. For details, call 757-5864.

A yard where snails are cultivated, not crushed

By ANNE PAPINEAU

'THIS IS what 6,000 snails look like,'' declares Janet Zury, gesturing in the direction of her orderly, quiet herd.

Placidly devouring lettuce leaves, 6,000 snails don't really seem like that many. In their trio of four-by-eight-foot bins, they look more like 600 snails. But Zury, who knows not only how to count snails but how to cook 'em, offers assurance that the figure is correct.

ARTS & LEISURE

''I'm building the herd,'' she points out.

Call her snail rancher, heliculturalist, or — as some do at her place of work at Community Hospital — Snail Queen. Zury is a member of that new breed that would rather cultivate snails than quash them. They are, after all, a very deliberate California import, brought here in the 1850s by a French gold prospector who didn't want to be deprived of his favorite appetizer.

''A suprising number of people confuse snails and banana slugs,'' noted Zury, who resides near the mouth of Carmel Valley.

Silly creatures, I thought, slugs are the sans shell garden mollusk.

''We never had snails. But banana slugs would come in out of the forest,'' she adds.

Now Zury has snails all right; her colony is cultivated within a shell's throw of her picture-perfect flower and vegetable gardens. No snail infestation there.

''It began last August,'' Zury explains. ''I picked up three snails and announced the beginning of the family. I started raising them in half-wine barrels. And I'll gladly pay a penny a snail for every viable snail.

''My immediate goal is to have 10,000. When I have 10,000, I'll share.''

Zury is assisted in her project by her husband, Carmel Middle School athletic director Dick Zury, and their son, Michael.

The snail herd literally requires daily attention. ''You do have to have a babysitter for your snails,'' Zury says.

The Zurys feed the escargot lettuce from their own garden. A system of misters keep the snails comfortably cool and moist.

''Raccoons like snails — they smash them,'' she adds. ''And don't overwater them. But keep them out of the sun.''

A rim of copper on the bins prevents the escargot from fleeing their temperate home.

''The mucus in their bodies causes a slight electrical charge that keeps them off the copper foil. A band of copper placed around the trunks of citrus trees was a boon to that industry.''

Once she began snail cultivation in earnest, Zury joined the thousand-member Snail Club of America, which is based in Fresno. There she learned not only of new ways to enjoy escargot, but that some California ranchers keep million-mollusk herds.

As an employee of the surgery department at Community Hospital, Zury often collects snails during her breaks.

''I gather at the hospital regularly,'' Zury notes. ''I collected 100 today. I don't like insects, snakes or spiders, but snails don't bother me a bit.''

Citing a recent Wall Street Journal article and information printed in the Snail Club newsletter, The Artichoke Leaf, Zury says that Americans spent an estimated $30 million last year to keep snails from munching crops. Ironically, canned snails are imported from overseas to supply restaurant demand.

''A canned snail compared to a fresh snail will appear shriveled,'' she observes.

And although she admits that snails have their cute side, ''They do kind of smile at you'' — her herd will ultimately be consigned to some appetizer or entree.

''I love to cook and I'm very inventive. I love to try new recipes and I read cookbooks like novels,'' she points out.

It is a culinary quantum leap from the garlic-buttered escargot served in restaurants to the plans Zury has made for her pampered, fresh-fleshed herd.

''I would like to see them sweet and sour, teriyaki, tempura — maybe on the sushi menu. They would not be raw, but skewered and barbecued, wrapped in bacon as you would a scallop or a shrimp.

''I prepare them sauced in herbs or wine and served with pasta. Some of the more renowned chefs have done a lot on these lines. You can use snails as you would chicken or abalone — in a chilled mousse. They're good in rice casserole. The president of the Snail Club likes his in scrambled eggs. Some experiment with pickling them.

''My family likes the herb and butter treatment. My husband prefers things properly seasoned or sauced. My son is still a little bit dubious. He's a little gourmet, but he's withholding his vote.''

Some trial and error has gone into her efforts to make the snails happy. It takes experience, for example, to gauge the amount of water or lettuce a herd prefers.

''They have very complex bodies. They have complete nervous, circulatory and reproductive systems. A snail produces eggs and fertilizes them.''

To determine snail age, count the coloration stripes — snails gain a new one each month. They are of edible size at six to eight months, Zury says.

When Zury obtains new snails she keeps them separate from the herd for a while in case they've been commercially poisoned. And before consumption, the escargot must be purged in a manner similar to cleansing clams. They are fed a diet of greens and water for two days, corn meal and water for two days and then just water for two days.

In a country where as much money is spent importing canned snails as eradicating them, Zury says she hopes local restaurants will grow in awareness and consider serving only fresh escargot.

''People can promote awareness simply by asking in a restaurant, 'is the escargot fresh?' I would someday like to see the local restaurants using my fresh escargot. Fresh are far superior to canned. And I share with friends — they're an excellent high protein, low calorie source of food.''

In the mean time, Zury says she views her herd, ''with some affection. I'm concerned about their welfare.''

Another benefit of snail ranching, she discovered, is that ''It really spices up a cocktail party. I've really enjoyed the expressions of people when I tell them.''

Following are escargot recipes from Janet Zury's collection:

Mushrooms Escargot

Per serving:

Large, fresh mushroom cap (3 inches if possible)

Mushroom stem finely chopped and sauteed in a little butter

1 or more escargot, depending on size

1 Tbsp. snail butter

1 Tbsp. heavy cream

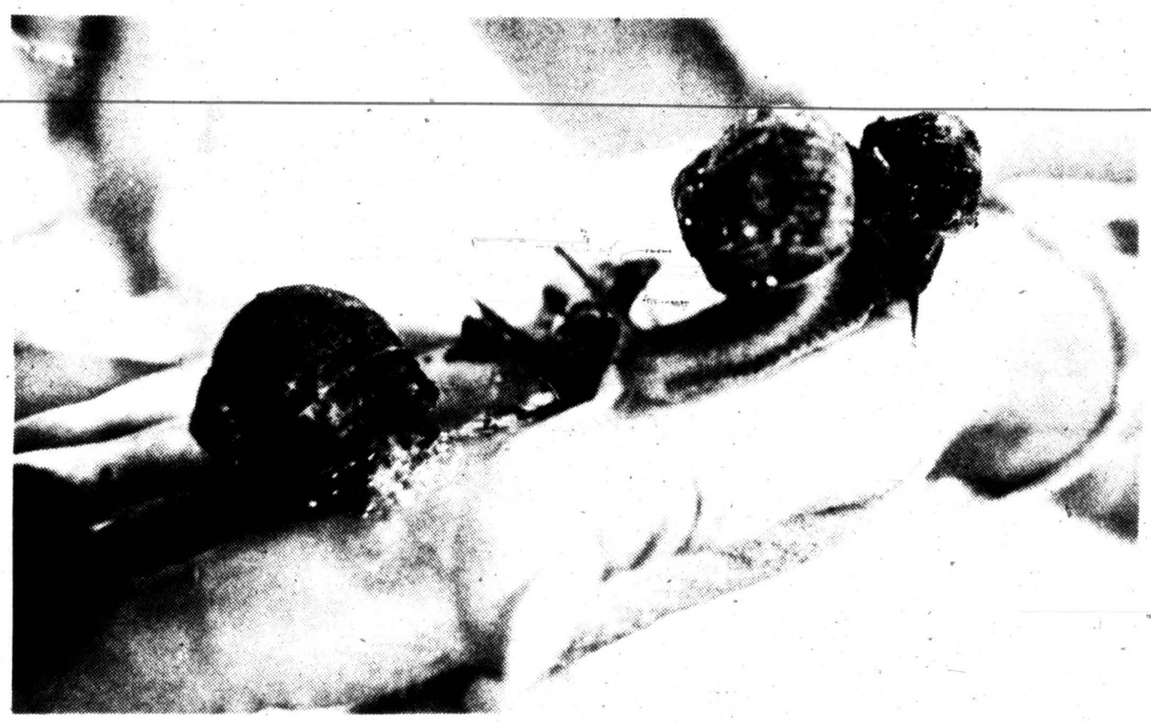
''I DON'T LIKE insects, snakes or spiders, but snails don't bother me a bit,'' declares Janet Zury, presented another snail by son, Michael. The Zurys are now heliculturalists, or snail ranchers, and consume their herd in omelettes, appetizers and main dishes. (Holly McFarland photograph).



SNAILS THRIVE on the vegetables grown for them in the Zury's garden. Proper moisture level is maintained in their bins through a series of misters. According to Janet Zury, ''The snails do kind of smile at you.'' (Holly McFarland photograph).

A HERD OF 6,000 fresh escargot are maintained in peak condition by Janet Zury, her husband Dick and their son, Michael, near their home at the mouth of Carmel Valley. Janet Zury incorporates the edible mollusks into both traditional and innovative recipes, declaring them far superior to canned snails. She is a member of the Snail Club of America. THEATER REVIEW
BY JOANNE TENENBAUM

GroveMont's TheaterFest on the Wharf

AT CUSTOM HOUSE Plaza, a stone's throw from Fisherman's Wharf in Monterey, TheaterFest '86 is in full swing. This free gallimaufry of theatrical entertainments, sponsored by the GroveMont Theater Arts Center, is in its third lively year, offering two classic fairy tales, a bloodthirsty human chess game, a rowdy Moliere farce, and a world premiere production of The Legend of Zorro, complete with powder pistols and lots of sword play.

Moliere's That Scoundrel Scapin is a broad farce adapted and directed by Jeff Hudelson to emphasize the play's physical comic action. Scapin is chockfull of slapstick humor and hijinks designed to grab the attention of the casual passerby. That it succeeds in doing so is a tribute to the skill of the actors as well, for Scapin is staged without scenery or props on the upper plaza stage, where every imaginable distraction presents itself, from low-flying airplanes to idling tour buses. But Scapin gets off to a lively start, and it maintains such a sprightly pace that, after 20 minutes, the distractions do not seem to matter — the audience is hooked, and it keeps on growing throughout the two-hour performance.

Scapin is the quintessential con man, played by Thomas R. Sanchez as though to the manner born. Scapin enjoys a well deserved reputation for his resourcefulness and his ability to talk his way out of anything. Much of the play's entertainment value derives from Scapin's machinations, as he is roped into cozening old Argante out of the money his son Octavio needs for his unacknowledged bride and into the even more impossible task of wheedling a much larger sum from Leander's miserly father Geronte, for a similar purpose. Leander must ransom his beloved from the gypsies or lose her forever.

One resourceful servant with a single problem to solve would have offered us action enough. But Moliere has doubled the trouble, confronting us with not one disapproving father, but two; not one damsel in distress, but two; not one noble young man defying his father's wishes, but two. But there is only one Scapin, and the play's action revolves around him.

Sanchez's Scapin is a sly and nimble street shrink playing on the fears and weaknesses of his prey. He is equally at home manipulating Argante's fear of lawyers and pulling the strings of Geronte's extreme greed. Switching gears as he deals with one dupe after another, he appears to be making up his patter as he goes along, and he even manages to enlist the age of Silvestro, Octavio's straight-laced servant, in his attempt to extricate both young noblemen from their romantic plights. In this demanding role, Sanchez is a rascally delight that should not be missed.

He is solidly backed up by Mark Heckman as Octavio, who gets applause for his very funny impersonation of a bloodthirsty pirate ("Bloody battle axes and bows!" he exclaims, brandishing a sword clumsily. "I'll cut up anything that moves!") Ellis Allbee's Argante and Alan Smith's Geronte are equally effective as the stubborn fathers beset with Scapin's machinations, and Vincent Salazar and Robert Basgall create a lot of fun in their roles of Octavio and Leander, respectively.

Director Hudelson takes sound advantage of the stage's proximity to the Wharf, for Argante enters from the shore side, supposedly just returned from a sea voyage, the masts visible at his back as he limps through the plaza, and Scapin's fabrication that Leander has been captured by Turkish pirates gains force from the bayside setting. Although the script takes many liberties with Moliere, the playwright's penchant for hoisting dupes with their own petards remains cannily intact. It's worth your while to wander through the plaza and catch this one.

AS LONG AS you're there, you might as well stick around, drop in on the human chess game, which ought to satisfy any serious gamesperson's urge for competition, and then look in on the Memory Garden, a convincing setting for local playwright and poet Dan Gotch's production of The Legend of Zorro.

Remember Zorro? The elegant fop by day who flitted around at night carving Z's in the shirtfronts of the bad guys in the days when California was young and the good guys spoke castilian Spanish? Well, he's back, and this time he's Stephen Moorer, who has a great deal of fun dropping lines from Hamlet like lace hankies in his attempt to mislead Commandante Mondragon and his evil crew of landgrabbers. Moorer also looks good in black and cuts a dashing figure as he streaks across the Custom House roof and glides down into the action.

This production is greatly enhanced by Mark Shuler's stage fight choreography, which is ably executed by the many characters who clash, and by the powder pistols that round out the conflicts. Lacking lighting or changes of scene, Gotch freezes the action to convey two settings at once, and this works surprisingly well.

David Miller is forceful and menacing as Garcia, Zorro's arch enemy, and Dorian Ellis is every inch a scheming siren as Estefania Mondragon, the Commandante's duplicious wife. Alan Smith is suitably courtly and outraged as Zorro's aristocratic father, though his British accent seems oddly out of place in Spanish California. Manuela Shaw is appealing as Alonsa, Zorro's beleaguered fiance, and copes well with the silliness of having to dress up as Zorro at one point and skirmish with the villains. Sue Fishkoff turns in a strong performance as Teresa, a courageous peasant. Ron Cohen's Mondragon is less convincingly evil than his henchmen, but Greg Coleman is wonderfully vicious as one of the villains. As Tomas, Zorro's friend and servant, Jeff Hudelson provides comic relief.

The Legend of Zorro is short on deathless prose and thematic depth, but it is packed with action and strong performances, and it offers a unique setting. Saturday night's performance was standing room only, so drop in early if you want a seat.

GroveMont's TheaterFest continues through July 29th and includes concession stands for snacks as well as a Mexican buffet so you can make a day of it. It is a treat to see the Custom House Plaza enlivened with so much colorful action at a price everybody can afford.

Now, what was Dracula doing in a chess game ...?

Children's musical presented

The summer apprentices of The Western Stage will present the children's musical Wheels. Wheels is a tribute to the human relationship with the wheel, from the joy it can bring when attached to a bike or car to the ease it can provide in its cog form.

Wheels will play at 1 and 2:30 p.m. Thursday and Friday, July 17-18, and 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Saturday, July 19 at the Western Stage in Salinas.

Admission is $1 and reservations are strongly advised. For reservations, call 375-2111 or 758-1221.

Four-day California Rodeo to open today in Salinas

HEAD-OVER-HEELS bronc bustin', bull riding and even Thoroughbred racing are standard fare during the California Rodeo, returning to Salinas Thursday through Sunday, July 17-20.

SUBTITLED "The Champion's Favorite," The California Rodeo returns Thursday through Sunday, July 17-20, to the rodeo grounds on North Main Street in Salinas.

The first California Rodeo was presented in 1911 as an intermission Wild West Show during the Salinas trotting races. By 1913 the trotters were gone and "The Big One" had taken its place. The California Rodeo now puts up a $44,400 purse for the six cowboy events.

The California Rodeo is classified as one of the "Big Four" outdoor rodeos of the world, along with Cheyenne, Pendleton and Calgary. Of 650 rodeos sanctioned annually by the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association, the California Rodeo is ranked number four in purse per day.

The rodeo begins at 1:30 p.m. daily, with events scheduled through 5 p.m. at the California Rodeo Grounds. Rodeo tickets are priced at $5 to $13.

Starting at 12:30 p.m. daily, a parade of 1,000 horses travels through Valley Center, South Main Street, Salinas.

Another daily staple of the California Rodeo is an exhibit of historical memorabilia in the new museum located next to the rodeo office. Sponsored by the California Rodeo Historical Committee, the exhibit includes saddles and spurs, hats, chaps, posters and novelties from California Rodeos dating back to the first in 1911. Admission is free to the exhibit.

Kicking off the rodeo on Thursday, July 17 will be the Roundup Day Barbecue. This steak barbecue will run 10:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. at the rodeo grounds. There will be western music, a chance to meet the cowboys who will compete that afternoon, and cocktails. Roundup Day Barbecue tickets are $20 and include lunch, a center grandstand seat at the rodeo and a souvenir program.

A "Strictly Country" get-together for the family arrives 7:30 p.m. Friday, July 18 at Sherwood Hall in the Salinas Community Center, 940 N. Main St. Co-sponsored by the First Presbyterian Church and California Rodeo Association, "Strictly Country" will feature The Cathedral Mountain Singers, The OK Chorale, dancers and "Hee-Haw-style" comedy.

Tickets are $6 for adults and $4 for children under 12 for admission to the cabaret (light refreshments) level. Balcony seating is $5 for adults and $3 for children under 12.

A rodeo square dance is scheduled Friday, July 18 at the Salinas Armory. Caller is Jerry Helt of Cincinatti, Ohio, a member of the Square Dance Callers' Hall of Fame. Admission is free. Pre-rounds will begin at 7:30 p.m. and squares are scheduled for 8 p.m.

Rodeo tickets can be purchased in advance at the rodeo office, 1034 N. Main St., Salinas. For more rodeo information, call 757-2951.

THEATER REVIEW

BY JAMES P. KINNEY

GroveMont Theater offers 'Sally and Marsha'

SALLY AND MARSHA, the second of three productions in the GroveMont 1986 Festival of Women's Plays, opened Friday, July 11 in the company's theater at Hoffman and Lighthouse in Monterey.

Written by Sybille Pearson, directed here by Rosamond Goodrich, the play was first produced at New York City's Manhattan Theater Club. It is a two-character play examining the relationship of two 30-year-old women from very different backgrounds who discover themselves living across the hall from each other in an apartment house on the Upper West Side of Manhattan.

Sally has recently arrived from South Dakota with her husband, a soap salesman. She is vulnerable, domestic, outgoing and very pregnant. She reads Dale Carnegie, spouts happy aphorisms compulsively, and buys into that quasi-religious belief that salvation and personal redemption lie in increased sales, reflecting that peculiarly American institution perhaps best exemplified by operations like Avon, Amway, and the late, locally based Cambridge Plan.

Marsha is married to a young doctor and is the reluctant mother of two small children (whom we never see). Her heart belongs to 19th century English novelists like Charles Dickens and Thomas Hardy. She is a stereotypical New Yorker — insecure, brittle, brainy and neurotic, a distaff Woody Allen.

Somehow these two women, out of mutual loneliness, frustration and a need to communicate, begin to develop a relationship which by the middle of the play has widened and deepened into a warm, nurturing friendship.

They fight. They make up. They probe each other's values. They discuss men, family, friendship, sex, and what it means to grow up women in the late 20th century. At first Marsha risks little, hiding behind her tough androgeny and her literary pretentions. But finally, in an especially moving and pivotal scene sometime after the only intermission, she reaches out in compassion to a Sally who suddenly demonstrates her own need to be comforted and nurtured.

Robin Jarrel as Sally and Joyce Lower as Marsha turn in solid performances. What comes across onstage is a comfortable working relationship between the two actors. Aside from a few well-covered stumbles, their characterizations are solid and nuanced, their comic timing commendably crisp.

Ably directed by Goodrich, this is a small play, but well worth seeing. In an age when human beings are so often portrayed regularly in the movies and on TV as vapid, vicious slobs, perverts, cranks and jerks, it is refreshing that in live theater we can still find the humor, pathos, and dignity that exist in ordinary people.

Sally and Marsha continues at 8 p.m. Thursdays through Saturdays until Aug. 2, with 2 p.m. Sunday matinees on July 20 and 27.

Crisis Line volunteers trained

Three times per year, the YWCA offers training classes to women in the community who are interested in serving on the Domestic Violence Crisis Line. These classes include the dynamics of family violence, crisis intervention techniques and appropriate legal action.

This volunteer training is held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 6 to 9 for three consecutive weeks beginning Tuesday, Aug. 5 at the YWCA office, 404 Camino El Estero, Monterey.

Volunteers dedicated to helping others seek violence-free relationships serve 12 or six-hour shifts weekly, answering calls from their own homes. They may follow up the call by meeting with the woman in crisis at a local police station or hospital to help her assess her situation and, if necessary, take her to the Women's Shelter.

The 24-hour Crisis Line handles more than 100 calls a month. Many volunteers find that the training provides them with opportunities to help others as well as developing counseling skills and providing career opportunities. For more information, call the YWCA office, 649-0864.

Summer-inspired color images by Meyerowitz exhibited

AN EXHIBITION of color photographs by Joel Meyerowitz will open in The Friends of Photography Gallery on Friday, July 18 and will continue through Aug. 31. An opening reception will take place 8 to 10 p.m. Friday in the gallery. The Friends Gallery, located in the Sunset Center, San Carlos at Ninth in Carmel, is open to the public 1 to 5 p.m. daily.

The photographs in this exhibition have been selected from Meyerowitz' latest body of images made mostly on Cape Cod between 1976 and 1983. Meyerowitz incorporated these photographs into the 1985 book A Summer's Day, in which he condensed seven years of work into a series representing different times of one typical summer's day. His subject matter consists of formally composed seascapes, dreamily lit interiors and porches, portraits of suntanned adolescents, still-lifes and other summer scenes such as a hammock twirling in the wind and a rain-dotted screen door. These images capture a serene and nostalgic quality associated with a lazy summer's day at the seashore. They were made with an eight-by-10-inch view camera, which, Meyerowitz claims, "describes everything with such incredible sharpness and luminosity that you could step into the picture."

Meyerowitz lives in New York City. He is most recognized for his personal work, but he is also respected as a commercial photographer. A recipient of two Guggenheim Fellowships and a National Endowment for the Arts grant, Meyerowitz received the Photographer of the Year Award from The Friends of Photography in 1981. In addition to A Summer's Day, he is also the author of three other books: Cape Light (1979), St. Louis and the Arch (1980) and Wild Flowers (1983).

THE TABLE by Joel Meyerowitz is among his "Summer's Day" images that will be exhibited at The Friends of Photography Gallery in Sunset Center, Carmel. The original photograph is in color.

Yousuf Karsh honored during portrait show at Weston Gallery

PORTRAITS BY Yousuf Karsh, who has photographed virtually every head of state, are the subject of an exhibit at the Weston Gallery in Carmel.

The artist will attend the opening reception, scheduled 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Friday, July 18, at the gallery on Sixth Avenue between Lincoln and Dolores streets.

The show will include prints from Karsh's recently published portfolio of his 15 most famous portraits. These large-format prints were especially commissioned by the Weston Gallery and produced in a limited edition.

Karsh once commented, "To make enduring photographs, one must learn to see with one's mind's eye, for the heart and the mind are the true lens of the camera."

To be "Karshed," as one of his subjects described it, has been a sign of personal accomplishment for a third of a century.

The exhibit of portraits by Yousuf Karsh can be viewed through the beginning of September at Weston Gallery. Two of his most recent books are also available there.
